The Finding of the Wife and Second Daughter

The Stolid Brute to Follow His Victims at Last-

BIRMINGHAM. Ala., February 27 .- [Special.] Hawes will hang at 12:30 tomorrow, and the execution will be strictly private, less than fifty tickets having been issued by the sheriff. The prisoner's last day on earth was passed Hawes slept until 6 o'clock this morning, and he slept soundly, too. Then, when he arose he called for a large bucket of water, and indulged in a thorough sponge bath, during which he kept up an animated conversation with the guard.

THE PREACHER ENTERS.

Shortly after 7 he gave an order for breakfast, and this is the bill of fare: "Broiled ham, fried steak, soft boiled eggs, buttered toast, hot rolls, coffee." The meal was served by 8 o'clock, and Hawes ate with an apparent relish. Then he exercised himself, walking rapidly up and down his cell for nearly an hour. His hands were clasped behind him, and his head bowed as he strode across the floor. He was evidently thinking, and thinking hard.

About 9 o'clock Dr. D. I. Purser, a Baptist minister, who has been visiting Hawes, was shown to the cell. As the minister entered, Hawes was still walking, but he stopped as Dr. Purser came up, and extending his hand,

"Oh, good morning, doctor, I'm awful glad to see you. How are you this morning?" There was a pleasant smile on Hawes's face. It was quite certain that he was in an excellent humor. Dr. Purser grasped Hawes's extended hand, and still holding it, walked across the cell to the bed. Then he picked up the Bible, and opening it read a chapter. Hawes listened attentively to the reading, all the time retaining that pleasant smile. Dr Purser closed the book and knelt beside the cot. Hawes dropped upon his knees beside the doctor. Then the minister began a fervent prayer, and Hawes interrupted the petition frequently with a hearty amen. The prayer over, the minister and Hawes resumed their seats upon the cot, and began talking. Hawes talked freely to the minister, and in his ion of his spiritual condition, manifest-He seemed to have the cardinal points of religion, and Dr. Purser was well pleased with what the prisoner said. He made reference to his trouble but once, and then said:

"I never harmed a hair on my wife's head, or my children's either."

Dr. Purser made no reply.

"But." Hawes went on, "I am guilty, I am an accessory to the murder."

Here he stopped.

"Do you know, doctor," he said, "that I am almost glad the end is here. No one know what the last five or six years of my life was. To tell you the truth, I would not live that part of my life over if, by living it over, I could walk out of here a free man. My God, the recollection of those miserable, horrible, dreary days is the greatest punishment I

The minister made no attempt to draw any thing from Hawes.

"My wife—I mean Miss Story," said Hawes. "wrote to me not long ago about you, doctor.

"Yes." remarked the minister. "She had heard you preach in Columbus and was thoroughly impressed with you," said the prisoner. "Then she wrote me," he continued, "and advised me to send for you, saving she knew you would do anything you could for me.' "I am pleased to do anything I can for you

Mr. Hawes," said the minister. "I knew that," replied the doomed man, "I have found that out, and I want to say, too, that you have done me good-more good than any one I know. That I have been a great ner, and I fear that I am eternally los do know that I have nothing to rely upon by which I can be saved, and all I can do is to put my trust, as best I can, in the promises you have pointed out to me."

WHAT THE MINISTER SAYS. Dr. Purser remained with Hawes an hour or two and then left. In speaking of the visit the minister says:

"I find his views extremely good and correct, and I have great hopes for him."

"Is he penitent?" the doctor was asked. "Thoroughly so," was his answer. "Hawes is trying hard to make his peace with his God, and he seems to understand what he is doing I shall remain with him to the end.'

See him hung, you mean?" "He has asked me to do so, and I shall call at the jail in the morning at half-past 9, and remain with him to the end."

During the day two other ministers, Methodists, passed an hour with Hawes. With both made the same impression as with Dr.

HIS BURIAL SUIT BROUGHT IN. About noon his burial suit was taken him He examined it critically, and expressed him-self pleased. The clothes were fashioned in the cutaway style, and were neat and well made and were presents to Hawes. His slip-pers will be of black morocco and stockings will be furnished by Sheriff Smith.

SEES HIS LITTLE BOY. About 3 o' k this afternoon Jim Hawes, Mrs. Hawes and Willie Hawes called to see

THE BLOODY CRIME the prisoner. The meeting was extremely affecting. The party drove to the jail in carriage, and made every attempt to avoid being seen, but they were not successful. A large crowd had congregated about the jail when the carriage drove up. Sheriff Smith accompanied them to the cell, and then withdrew a safe distance. He had no design drew a safe distance. He had no desire to intrude, and gave the party as much privacy as the law would allow him. The meeting between Mrs. Hawes and her brother-in-law made a sad picture, but when the father threw his arms about his son, the picture could not have been resinted. The her the father threw his arms about his son, the picture could not have been painted. The boy cried bitterly, while the father moaned and groaned as though in great agony. His cries could be heard upon the street, and many who had been drawn towards the jail through idle curiosty, moved away as though ashamed. The doomed lakeside, but no one could identify the dead girl, and she was removed to Lockwood & Miller's undertaking parlors in the city. During the evening hundreds called at the parlors to view the remains, but dark came on bringing with it no solution of the mystery.

The body, robed in pure white, rested in a handsome satin lined casket. The face, though white as marble, was free from the look of death, and every one who gazed upon it had some remark to make about the child's great beauty.

The Birmingham Age Herald on Wednesdas morning contained a graphic and pathetic story form the pen of City Editor Hawley about the dead child. The story was touching in the extreme, and drew large crowds to the side of the coffin. Long before the place was open in the morning a crowd had congregated, and throughout the entire day a stream of curious people passed through the rooms.

"I understand that he is in Columbus, Miss., and will be married there today." This declaration-created a profound sensation.

How could Hawes marry if he had a wife

How could Hawes marry if he had a wife living?

If his wife was not living, when did she die and where was the body?

What was the cause of that death?

These-were some of the questions which suggested themselves to the jury.

In a short time, however, it was stated that Hawes had said that he had been divorced from the mother of his children and that he had given her $500 to go to Indiana and had placed the two girls in a convent at Mobile, and had sent the boy to Atlanta to Jim Hawes, his brother.

The convent story carried the lie on its face, for one of the girls was in the coffin before the jury.

Telegrams were sent to Atlanta, and answers came back saving that the how was with Jim

When Hawes was arrested he received the announcement as stolidly and coolly as if he had just heard something in which there was no interest. His manner in no way indicated a nervousness or any knowledge of the crime charged to him. He did not bother the officers with any questions and made but one remark before reaching the jail.

"I am innecent of this charge" he said jail.

"I am innocent of this charge," he said.
"The body of one of the children has been found," remarked Deputy Sheriff Truss, "and is in an undertaker's shop."
But Hawes made no reply to this, neither did he exhibit any emotion or manifest any desire to see the body.

was desired. Everything that could be done to break off the attachment was done by the Pettis family.

But the girl could not be turned from her

But the girl could not be turned from let determination.

The Pettis family were Catholics and Hawes was not, and this was used with the girl, but it went like all other arguments. In 1879 her church was conducting a fair in the Markham house building, and Miss Pettis was one of the most popular ladies in the work. She assisted in the refreshment department, and was always the center of a group of admirers, and the recipient of many an envious glance from her own sex. On Saturday night, July 8th, Miss Pettis went to the fair, and, approaching one of the ladies, still well known in Atlanta, at the booth, said: "I can't stay long tonight."

"Why?" asked the lady.

"Oh, I'll tell you the next time I see you; I can't tell you now."

In a short time Hawes entered the hall and mingled with his friends. Then joining Miss Pettis they left the fair without attracting attention. Outside a carriage was standing and into it they got, Hawes saying to the driver: "Drive to Payne's chapel, quick!"

There was a protracted meeting at the chapel and Hawes and Miss Pettis entered the church, taking seats in the back part. When the services were over Hawes approached the minister and requested him to perform the marriage ceremony. He presented his license, and when they left the church and re-entered the carriage they were man and wife. That night they passed at a boarding-house, and he next morning the bride sent a note to her home informing them of her marriage and asking. Jorgiveness. The note was answered by her father, and when Mrs. Hawes read it she realized for the first time the great offense she had given her family.

lather, and when Mrs. Hawes read it she realized for the first time the great offense she had given her family.

Colonel Pettis refused most positively to receive his daughter and her husband, or to even forgive her.

She was devoted to Hawes, however, and he was equally fond of her, and with happy thoughts of the future, they began life. For a short time a boarding-house was their home, and then Hawes bought a lot on Hunter street, near the Pettis home and put up a neat cottage. There they began housekeeping apparently unmindful of the proximity of the Pettis family, but all the time sincerely hoping that forgiveness would come. Hawes was devoted, kind and gentle with his wife—in every respect he was a model husband, while she seemed to worship him. A year of happiness, the recollection of which must have been Hawes's greatest punishment during the last year of his life, went by and then the sun began to shine brighter than ever. May was born.

May was born.
With the little one came greater happiness than either had ever known. She was a bright, winsome child, with dark, curly hair and bright happy laughing eyes. To her the father became a slave and the mother a patient, loving guardian.

But greater happiness came too when Mrs.
Hawes' sisters throwing off the restraint came to the little one's side and picking it upcarried it to their home.

That sweet face did what nothing else could do.

It made the mother relent and with the grand-child in arms she entered her daughter's home.

grand-child in arms she entered her daughter's home.

The reunion was a happy one and none were happier than Hawes himself.

But the happiness was levened with misery. Colonel Pettis would not forgive and refused to allow his daughter to enter his home.

The little one grew and when the day came to give it a name Mrs. Hawes asked her youngest sister to suggest one. Miss Pettook the little one in her arms and imprinting a kiss upon its lips, said:

"Emma, let's name it for the month in which it was born. Let's call it May."

And so the baby was given its name. It string to grow in strength and beauty. Every day sile bow has ore of a picture of her mother, and every had eeper into her parents' hearts, and the parents' hearts, and the present its little fewey's lipself the present to her had been the grandfather, however, the index incelled the little fewey's lipself the little fewey's lipself to his lipself to his little fewey's lipself to his little fewey's lipself to his little few

Devoted to his little family, Hawes continued to work and saving and hoarding his salary for them, until his bank account became quita respectable. He was sober, industrious and popular with all who knew him, and when at home he passed his time with those he loved and neglected the saloons and card-rooms. He and his wife were always well-dressed, and were welcome visitors at many, many of the best Atlanta homes.

Two years more went by, and then a second child, little Irene, was added to the home. At the jail he submitted quietly to a thorough search and followed the officers to a cell without uttering a word. Later in the night he was visited by a reporter, who remarked:

"You know why you are arrested, I presume?"

"For murder," he answered, coolly. "I am charged with killing one of my children."
"Your daughter Mamie," said the reporter.
"You mean May, I suppose," he said calmly.
"She is my oldest daughter."

"You mean May, I suppose," he said calmly. "She is my oldest daughter."

Then in response to questions he said:

"I saw May last, I think, on Saturday night, at the house on Thirty-second street, near the ball park. I brought my boy to the car that evening, and sent him to Atlanta by my brother, who is taking care of him. I was away from the house about two hours, and when I returned I found the mother of my children and my two little girls gone. The woman was once my wife, but I was divorced from her in October last, and have not lived with her since. She has taken care of our children since, and I have provided her with money. I have been on the road most of the time since. When I came to town I would stop at the hotels, and sometimes went out to see the children. I would frequently see her and always spoke to her. She is the mother of the three children and I am their father. We have been married nine years. May is eight years old on the 31st of next month. I searched for the children on Saturday night and Sunday, and concluded that she had left town with them. I left the city for Columbus yesterday morning at 7 o'clock. I stopped at the Florence hotel Monday night. I think I returned about 12. I sat around the office and talked with a friend of mine named Wyly for child, little Irene, was added to the home. Their cup of joy was full, and only one thing was wanting to make it overflow.

That was the forgiveness of Colonel Pettis.

For that they prayed and longed, and just then they were upon the eve of having their prayer answered.

But the answer cost both Hawes and his wife

Ditter sorrow.

The price was the death of her mother and his mother—for she had long ago learned to love and respect her son-in-law and to look upon him as a man of whom any one might be proud.

Soon after the birth of Irene, Mrs. Pettis Soon after the birth of Irene, Mrs. Pettis was taken ill., and in a short time it was apparent that she could not recover. During her illness she was constantly calling for Emma and her husband. Colonel Pettis sat beside the bed and heard the heart-breaking calls, but would not relent. Finally his heart was touched and he said: "Emma may come, but Hawes can't."

Instantly a bright light came to the dying woman, and her daughter was sent for. Mrs.

Instantly a bright light came to the dying woman, and her daughter was sent for. Mrs. Hawes heard it all and was hesitating in her acceptance because her husband was not included. He was present, and seeing the strugle placed his arms about her. Drawing her to him, he kissed her forehead:

"Go, Emma," he said, "your mother has been so kind to us. Go and do what you can for her; never mind me."

The wife clung to her devoted husband a minute, and then withdrawing from his tender embrace, went to her mother's bedside. Her father received her with a kiss, and then Her father received her with a kiss, and then for days she watched her mother's life ebbing slowly but surely away. Every day some little delicacy came to the dying woman. There were no cards, no notes, no messages but mother and daughter knew who had sent it. Day after day Mrs. Pettis sank, and day after day the daughter sat beside the bed. Finally the end approached, and, with the dews of death upon her face, Mrs. Pettis turned to her husband, saying: "Hush, my darling," said the husband, bending over her.

"But you are happy," said the husband, as the tears poured down his cheeks.

"No, but I would be happy—I would die happy—if you would only forgive Richard."

Then hesitating a second she said:

"Won't you forgive him? He has been so kind, so good, so loving to Emma."

Mrs. Hawes slipped from her chair to her knees and holding up both hands said:

"Yes, father, forgive him. Forgive him as you have forgiven me."

With a face radiant with happiness Mrs. Hawes sprang through the doorway, and hurrying home, threw her arms around her husband's neck, exclaiming:
"Papa wants you. He has forgiven you."
There was a joyous ring in her voice, and Hawes's face showed the great happiness the message brought him. Together had his wife hurried back

READY FOR DEATH. Sheriff Smith declines to relate anything that transpired during the visit, asserting that the meeting was too sacred. Hawes's sup-per was very light, and up to midnight he read his Bible, prayed and talked occasionally to the deathwatch. He is wholly resigned, and says that he is perfectly willing to die. He does not talk much about his execution, but what he does say he promised to take his body to Atlanta. Hawes comes forward with another request, and that is that his body be kept from the public. One undertaker here, Mr. Miller, of Lockwood & Miller, always has an eye open for a good card, and has offered to present Hawes with a fine casket and send him home, if he can have the body removed from the jail to his establishment, to await the departure of the train. Hawes, however, declined this proposition, and has asked his brother to see to the body. Tickets to the execution are in great demand, and as much as two hundred dollars have been offered for one. But they are not for sale. Here is the way the ticket reads: "Office of the sheriff, Jefferson county, Ala

MAY HAWES'S BODY FOUND.

It was on Tuesday, December 4, 1888, the ody of May Hawes, the oldest child of the red-handed murderer, was found floating in East Lake.

The day was a warm, sunshiny, spring day in the very heart of winter-so warm that th very waters in which the little one rested had lost their chill.

Two small boys were boating upon the lake and near the east bank observed something floating in the water. Idle curiosty induced them to row towards the object and when they reached it and found that they had discovered a dead body, their horror was intense. Row ing to the shore they informed one of the watchmen of what they had found and a boat was quickly speeding over the waters guided by one of the boys. The body was floating with the head only under the water. It was lifted into the boat and taken to the summer pavilion near the lake. Then a messenger was sent into Birming

The pleasant day had sent many people from Birmingham to the lake, and in a few minutes after the body had been laid upon a bench under the pavilion, crowds began to gather. Ladies assembled around the corpse with tender hands, wiped r from the face and br water from the lace and brushed back the wavy, brown hair. Then it could be seen that the child was unusually pretty. Her large blueleyes were more than half open, and this gave the face an unpleasant appearance, but when an old white-haired lady in the crowd bent reverently over the head and closed the eyes, an entire change came over the face.

mechanics, miners, professional men, ladies and children, people of all shades and occupation; moved in a never-ending procession by the casket drawn to the saddening spectacle as if by an irresistable magnet. No one came, however, who could give the dead child a name, and at noon Coroner Babbett called his jury together, and a verdict was made. Then Undertaker Miller was instructed to bury the body and mark the grave nuknown.

But the little one was not to be laid away as sussion or threats

Just as the coroner completed his instruc-tions, W. O. Franklin, a butcher who supplied the Hawes family, and who knew every mem-ber of it, entered the room and gazing at the face a second said: face a second, said:
"Why, that's May Hawes; Dick Hawes's child!"

The remark instantly focused every eye upon Mr. Franklin, and the coroner, who had started out of the room, returned to the casket. "You know her?" he asked.

"Of course I know her. Her father is Dick Hawes, an engineer on the Georgia Pacific road. They used to live out near the baseball park on the Lakeview dummy line, but I think they moved to Maridian last week. I have

Franklin's story aroused an interest which had begun to die out and in a short time it was well known that the body had been identified. The coroner at once called his jury together again and Franklin's testimony was reduced to writing. He identified the child positively and said that he had seen her last on the preceding Saturday when she came to his ceeding Saturday when she came to his shop for meat, and that then she had told him that her father intended to leave for Meridian, Miss., that night, to be followed by her mother and children, within a few days. Mr. Franklin had learned that by Monday the family had left the house lately occupied by them, and supposed that they had really gone to Mississippi, as the child had said, until he saw the body.

said, until he saw the body.

Not long after Mr. Franklin's identification became known several parties who had known May Hawes looked at the face and corroborated the identification. Dr. H. S. Duncan, well known throughout Birmingham, had been the Hawes family physician, and when he heard of the identification visited the undertaking parties.

"That's May Hawes," he said, as he glanced at the face. "I know that face well, and have seen it often at her mother's home. Once I was called to see the mother, who was Once I was called to see the mother, who was recovering from a protracted debauch, and this little girl was her only nurse. Mrs. Hawes had been badly beaten up, and said that her husband had beaten her. Between this child and the mother there was the strongest love I ever saw. It was apparent at a glance. The child was absolutely devoted to the woman, and the woman, with tears in her eyes, said:

"She is my only and my best friend, and I think I would have died but for her."

"Of course I know nothing about the family relations except what I heard there, and that I have repeated."

The identification having been complete, The identification having been complete, a search was made for the dead girl's father and mother. The father could not be found, and no clew to him could be obtained at the Georgia Pacific shops, other than a statement that he had secured a leave of absence a few days before. The cottage was found deserted, and near it was found a negro woman, Fannie Bryant, who, when asked about the Hawes family said.

family, said:

"Mrs. Hawes and her two children, Willie and Irene, have gone to Atlanta. But you had better ask Mr. Hawes, 'cause he dried up one man this morning about it,'"

The woman was taken before the coroner's jury and her evidence created quite a sensation. It indicated that the woman did not tell all she knew about the Hawes family and induced a belief that the dead body in the undertaker's place was not the only one to figure in the story.

WILLIE HAWES.

Telegrams were sent to different points in Indiana, where Mrs. Hawes was said to have gone, but the answers all indicated that she gone, but the answers was not there.
Fannie Bryant's story before the grand jury was not as lucid as it might have been. She manifested a knowledge of the child's death and a possible knowledge of the disposition of Mrs. Hawes and Irene, but no amount of persusion or threats would induce her to say uasion or threats would induce her to say nore. The statement was full of contradictions and had a tendency to confuse the jury, and induced every member to believe she ought to be held as a witness, and possibly an accessory, to a crime, if a crime had been committed. She was sent to jail, and then the search for Hawes and the missing wife and child were resumed.

HAWES'S MARRIAGE AND ARREST. Nothing could be learned until that night hen the Age-Herald received a special from Columbus, Miss., saying: Columbus, Miss., December 5.—Mr. R. R. Hawes, Columbus, Miss., December 5.—Mr. R. R. Hawes, one of the most popular employes of the Georgia Pacific railway, and Miss Mayes Story, daughter of Mr. J. D. Story, of this place, were married this evening at 3 o'clock at the residence of the bride's father, the Rev. J. W. Price officiating. They left at once for a visit to his relatives in Augusta, Ga., and a bridal tour through the east. There were no eards, and only a few friends were present. City Editor Hawley, who had become thoroughly aroused in the work, at once communicated with the chief of police, the coroner and Sheriff Smith. To them he showed the telegram, and Sheriff Smith, than whom there is no shrewder or braver officer in the south, remarked:

"He will be here tonight, and I think we ought to arrest him. You see the evidence be-fore Mr. Babbett, the coroner, shows that May Hawes was with her father after dark Monday, Hawes was with her father after dark Monday, and that they came towards the city. Then the next morning her body was found in East lake. Maybe Hawes can explain this. If he can, all right. But if he can't—
"Then he should be held," said the chief, breaking in.
During all this time all Birmingham had been dispussing the story, and all process of the

During all this time all Birmingham had been discussing the story, and as page after page was turned, the impression prevailed that the girl had been murdered, and the mother and sister put out of the way probably by violence too. The officers were inclined to concur with the people, and when the train from Columbus rolled into the union depot at 9:40 that night, Deputy Sheriff Truss was there with a warrant for Hawes. The officer entered the ladies' coach, and about half way down saw Hawes sitting beside his bride, to whom he had been wedded only a few hours before. The lady was looking into Hawes's face, smiling happily, a ripple of merry laughter falling from her lips as Truss touched Hawes upon the shoulder. The groom looked up, and seeing some one bending over him, said:
"Well?"

Just then one of Hawes's friends who knew of the charge entered the coach and Hawes introduced him to his bride.

"This gentleman," he said, "is a friend of mine and he will see you to the hotel. I will come just as soon as I get through with this business."

talked with a friend of mine named Wyly for a couple of hours before I retired. I spent the first part of the night with my brother at the depot. He left for Atlanta during the night. "I got a divorce from my wife in Atlanta last October. I don't remember in what court. My plea was infidelity on her part. I filed the suit two years ago, but according to the Georgia law a couple must wait two years before the decree can be granted. The decree of the divorce court gave me the custody of the children. I was going to take the girls off to school in Mobile on Sunday last. I had made all arrangements through Father O'Reilly, of this place, and was to leave them there until they place, and was to leave them there until they were grown, paying only twenty-five dollars per month for the two. My wife's maiden name was Emma Pettis."

THE STORY OF EMMA PETTIS. The statement of Hawes brings up the story lived in a pretty cottage on Hunter street, the life and happiness of the entire family. Her father was well off, being worth $30,000 or $40,000, and the young ladies were his pride. Of the three, Emma was by odds the most beautiful. A happy, plasant face, a sweet, amiable disposition, a thorough education and graceful, easy manners, added to a perfect form always tastefully and exquisitely dressed, made her one of the most popular young ladies in the city. There was no lack of attendants, and the Pettis home was the scene of many happy events. Among those most devoted to the girl were Dick Hawes, then riding his first engine, and a young gentleman now one the girl were Dick Hawes, then riding his first engine, and a young gentleman now one of Atlanta's leading business men. Hawes was then a handsome young fellow, always faultlessly dressed. His conduct was exemplary, but there was something in the man's past which made him objectionable to the Pettis family. This objection, however, went for nothing in the pretty woman's eyes, and notwithstanding the prayers and entreaties of her parents and sister, she continued to receive Hawes and to slight the gentleman to whom her marriage

"Thank God—now 1 can die happy."

Colonel Pettis was standing beside the bed, and, as Hawes turned from the dying woman, the colonel extended his hand, for a minute the two men grasped hands, and then Colonel Pettis asked of Hawes the same promise he had exacted from his daughter. The promise was readily given, and, with the family around the bed, Mrs. Pettis passed away, happy in the reunion she had brought about.

Then the funeral came, and over the grave of his wife Colonel Pettis's tears were mingled with those of his son-in-law. For a day or two the house was a desolate, dreary place to the bereaved husband, and then he asked Hawes and his wife to carry out their promise and move under his roof. The two, already man and wife, sought a priest and were again married. Then they moved into the Pettis home, where happiness reigned supreme. Hawes made himself a favorite with the Colonel, as he had with the other members of the family and when.

nel, as he had with the other members of the family, and when, a year or two later, a son was given him, he gave to that nel, as he had with the other members of the family, and when, a year or two later, a son was given him, he gave to that son his father-in-law's name. Soon after the son came to gladden the house Colonel Pettis was taken ill suddenly and died. Then in a short time the younger daughter, Miss Maggie Pettis, followed her father and mother to the grave, leaving Mrs. Hawes the heiress to the entire estate.

For her family everything looked bright, but just when the world was brightest a dark cloud began to creep over the domestic sky.

Just how it started and what caused it the lady who gave me the pry of the family does not know.

Just how it started and what caused it the lady who gave me the gry of the family does not know.

Neither can any one of the many who knew the family so well throw any light upon it.

It appears, however, that Mrs. Hawes had contracted a taste for whisky, and frequently drank to excess. At first the husband was kept in ignorance of the deplorable wrong to him, but as the habit grew upon her it became apparent to him. It is said that Hawes first learned the story one day when he entered his home to find his wife upoh the floor dead drunk. The discovery must have been horrible, and after that unhappy scenes in the Hawes home were many and frequent. The wife appears to have fought bravely against her appetite for run, but she could not control it. One sin naturally follows another, and in a few months Hawes began to suspect that run drinking was not his wife's only sin. It was a bare suspicion at first, but in the husband's jealousy it found a home where it was nursed and petted until it controlled the man's life. He began spying upon his wife, and engaged detectives to watch her closely. This went on until one day some three years ago he secured almost positive proof of his wife's infidelity. Mrs. Hawes numbered among her acquaintances a large, fierce-looking man, known throughout the city. Hawes became very jealous of him. Upon one occasion he learned that an engagement existed between this man and his wife and that they were only waiting for him to leave town. He kept his knowledge to himself and that evening bade his family good bye as usual and went to his engine for a run to Montgomery. He pulled his family good bye as usual and went to his en-gine for a run to Montgomery. He pulled his train out of town, but down the read about Palmetto met the incoming train and induced the engineer to trade off with him. This brought him back to the city about midnight, brought him back to the city about midnight, and after seeing his engine put away Hawes went to his home. Everything was in darkness and without arousing any one he entered the house, and making his way to his wife's bedroom, discovered a confirmation of his worst suspicions. What he saw maddened him beyond endurance, and with murder in his heart he left the house, and going into the yard, picked up an ax. Then he quietly returned to the room, and was in the act of driving the keen blade into the head of his wife's paramour when the latter awoke. What this man saw as he opened his eyes must have sent ing the keen blade into the head of his wife's paramour when the latter awoke. What this man saw as he opened his eyes must have sent a chill to his heart. The ax in the hands of an infuriated, dishonored, wronged husband was descending, and the man sprang from the bed, grappling the wild, desperate Hawes. The paramour was much larger than the man whose home he had despoiled, and easily succeeded in wrenching the ax from his grasp. But as he secured the weapon his feet slipped and he fell to the floor. Upon the hearth there was a large heavy iron poker, and, seizing this, Hawes dealt the man a trible blow over the blood came then, stand then, stand then, stand then, stand then stand then was apparently dead. The racket aroused the woman and her screams awakened the neighborhood, but when neighbors came in they found Hawes beating and abusing his wife. The trouble attracted the attention of the police and Hawes was arrested and taken to police headquarters. So was his wife. Physicians were called in for the man and the woman. His condition was found to be coulted dangerous and he was removed.

wife, and in order to secure the property Hawes agreed to abandon the suit and resume Hawes agreed to abandon the suit and resume his relations with the woman if she would make the property over to him. This she refused to do, but a compromise between the two was effected by which the property was transferred to him in trust for the children. Hawes's friends looked upon the transaction as a sale of his character, honor and self-respect, and many of them began to avoid him. Seeing that he could not hope to regain his standing in Atlanta, Hawes moved his family to Montgomery, where he lived a year. The expose carried with it all the pride Mrs. Hawes ever had, and in Montgomery she gulckly became had, and in Montgomery she quickly became a notorious character. Before the dissination had, and in Montgomery she qulckly became a notorious character. Before the dissipation her beauty rapidly faded, and in a short time she looked wholly unlike the beautiful woman once well known and so much admired in Atlanta. Montgomery soon knew the story, and as if running from hisshame, Hawes took his family to Birmingham.

In Birmingham he rented a cottage in the suburbs and 4neir established his family. Of his wife in Birmingham but little is actually known. There are those who say that Hawes lived with the woman, introducing her as his wife, and there are those who say that he paid her house rent and provided for her and his children, but rarely wisited the place. It may be said, however, with a certainty that he visited the woman often enough to beat and maltreat her, and that he poorly provided for them, the final trial showing Hawes up as a most brutal monster.

IV.

THE BODY OF MRS. HAWES FOUND. The morning after Hawes's arrest dawned with a cloudless sky, but the warm sunshine, which came a few hours later, was shut out from him by a prison roof.

His bride, from whose side he had been torn the evening before, had heard the story in all its fullness, and was crushed beneath the great shame and humiliation her marriage had brought to her.

The town was teeming with all sorts of stories. Hawes's past life was discussed, his character and habits dissected, and his responsibility for the death of May and the disappearonee of Mrs. Hawes and Irene considered.

few, however, expressed a confidence in Hawes's innocence.

As the day wore on and nothing could be heard from Mrs. Hawes and Irene, the impression that they had been murdered too grew. This theory was given a fresh impetus when it was learned positively that Hawes had never been divorced from her as he claimed. With a divorce there would be no cause for the murder but without one he could not marry Miss Story while the woman lived. The denial of the divorce darkened the cloud over Hawes's head and gave detectives and searchers a new energy to find the missing members of the Hawes family. The testimony indicated that Mrs. Hawes and the two girls were alive on Saturday night, and that Hawes was at the house, but after Saturday night nothing could be learned of them.

Simply because May wes found in East lake, it was believed by many that the bodies of the other two would be found there too, and all day long the bottom of the lake was dragged for

But they were not there. So strong became the im So strong became the impression that Hawes had killed them all by drowning, that parties visited every lake about Birmingham, with hooks and drags. Nearer the Hawes cottage than any of these lakes was Lakeview, and upon this searchers worked carefully all the day.

Early in the morning telegrams were received from Atlanta saying that Mrs. Hawes had reached that city Sunday night and had been driven away from the union depot by a cabman. The cabby claimed to have known Mrs. Hawes well when she lived in Atlanta, and was positive that his passanger was Mrs. Hawes. This information was received with joy by Hawes's friends, and for a time the current against Hawes was it.

And well for Hawes was it.

Soon after that telegram was received.

Soon after that telegram

COLONEL T. G. JONES. Hawes was taken from the jail and escorted to the undertaking rooms, where the body of May reposed in the casket. Along the streets were groups of angry citizens, who scowled at the man as he went by, and but for that Atlanta That telegram induced the belief that the Hawes made no objection when informed Hawes made no objection when informed that he would have to visit his dead child, neither did he manifest any desire to see her. At the parlor there was a large crowd, but the people parted to make way for the father and his companion, Sheriff Smith, as they walked into the room. There was a stillness, the stillness of, death, when Hawes reached the side of the casket. Every we was upon him and the people remote from eye was upon him and the people remote from the casket, tip-toed and stretched their necks to see and strained their ears to hear. Hawes to see and strained their ears to hear. Hawes stopped beside the coffin, and for a half minute glanced down at the lifeless face. Then bending over the coffin, he kissed the face and straightening himself up looked the jury and the crowd behind squarely in the face. Not a muscle of his face appeared to move and there was a complete absence of any feeling of grief or fear about him.

"Do you know that body, Mr. Hawes?" asked the coroner.
"That is my child, May Hawes," he answered

"That is my child, May Hawes, he again looked at the dead child he resumed:
"I don't want her to be buried as a pauper, for I can pay the bill. If I secure my release in time I'll bury her myself as she should be larged."

Hawes s conduct and his evident heartless. Hawes s conduct and his evident heartless-ness turned many against him. wad 48 he was led back to jail many sureats reached his ears, but to these he was wholly indifferent. Not long of the Hawes was put back in his cell, teregrams came from Atlanta saying that the woman driven away from the depot by the hackman was not Mrs. Hawes. This caused the murder theory to advance rapidly again. the murder theory to advance rapidly again and as witness after witness was examined by and as witness after witness was examined by the coroner, information strengthening it was secured. This information presented to the jury blood stains upon the floor and walls of the Hawes home, bloody clothing under the house, a bloody cudgel in Mrs. Hawes's room and tangled locks of Mrs. Hawes's hair about the tangled locks of Mrs. Hawes's hair about the place. All these things indicated a terrible struggle, and of themselves suggested a horrible murder. Then Fanny Bryant came forward with another story in which she said.

"I went to Hawes's home. Saturday morning about 9 o'clock to carry a pillow slip I had washed. There was blood on that slip when ing about 9 o'clock to carry a pillow slip I had washed. There was blood on that slip when It was given me, and it came from a wound on Mrs. Hawes's head. She told me that the wound had been made by her husband who had hit her with a heavy stick. Mr. Hawes and May were there. I went into the house. I met May at the door, and she took the pillow-slip, saying: "Mamma is not here, Fanny. Nobody is here but papa and I." She asked her father if I could come in. He asked who I was. May said I was Fanny. He said come in, and I did so. She said her mother went away that morning. Hawes said she had gone to Atlanta. She was vexed because he sent Will off, he said. He said his wife said she was going to bring Will back from Atlanta. There were two mattresses on the floor. They looked as though they had both been occupied. May said she had slept with her father; that her mother had taken Irene, her sister, with her. Sarah Lett was at my house Monday night when Hawes came for May; so was my nephew, Albert."

These discoveries increased the feeling against Hawes, and open threats of mob law were indulged in. At first there were mutterings—a far off thunder, suggestive of the terrible storm which was slowly but surely gathering over Birmingham. During all this time the lakes were still being dragged, and the feeling against Hawes was increasing. Many level headed citizens predicted trouble, but the predictions were laughed down. All day Friday the search went on, and all that day Hawes paced restlessly up and down, up and down his cell floor. He refused to converse with any one further than to deny These discoveries increased the feeling down, up and down his cell floor. He refused to converse with any one further than to deny all knowledge of the crime charged to him. His bride was still at the hotel, being carefully cared for by sympathizing, tender ladies, and of her Hawes was constantly thinking. During the afternoon he asked Sheriff Smith for paper and pencil, saying:

"I want to write my wife a note, and I want you to send it to her."

Like all brave men. Sheriff Smith is as

Like all brave men, Sheriff Smith is as tender-hearted as a woman, and granted Hawes's first request, as he has granted the prisoner every possible favor and kindness since assuming charge of him. He supplied Hawes with the writing material, and then sent the note. That note read:

My Darling Mayes: What can I say to you for the terrible trouble I have got into. I know how independent you are, and only blame myself for not telling you all. For God's sake do not think I am gnilty of this terrible thing; try and judge me as hight as you can. I loved you so I was afraid to tell you about her. I knew you would not have to be troubled with her, as she would be in a convent. Don't believe anything you see in the papers, as not one-half is true. Let me know what you are going to do to me this eve. This terrible suspense is fast killing me. I don't think I can stand it much longer. Oh, my darling, if you only know you could not censure me too severe, for it will prove out all right. Your broken hearted and most miserable one. RIGHARD.

P. S.—You will see me this p. m., if I can get off. The postscript was a wise one, as it explained Hawes's abscence that evening.

The clouds grew blacker every minute, and the situation was telegraphed to the military authorities at Montgomery by Major G. B. West. Then the mayor, Mr. Thompson, was advised to order out the local military and guard the jail, but the mayor could not see the necessity for it and declined. Dark settled upon the town that night, and as men ceased their daily work and began mingling about the hotels, saloons and streets, the feeling against Hawes became more and more intense.

To the most careless it became apparent that the finding of two more dead bodies would precipitate a bloody fight, or Hawes's death at the hands of a mob.

Saturday morning found the streets thronged with people. Everybody was engrossed with nor that he should return to Birmingham by the first train.

The mayor was again asked to call out the local military, but he declined, stating and unquestionably believing that a show of military force would only exasperate the people and bring about the very disturbance every good citizen was endeavoring to avert. Sheriff Smith was one among those who asked for the military, and when his request was denied, began making his own arrangements for the defense of the jail. When dark came on every leading street in Birmingham was thronged with people. The crowds were not disorderly, but there was that about them which induced cool headed people to move among them urging the necessity for maintaining the law and preserving order. The saloons were open and nearly everybody was drinking freely, and here the mayor made another fatal error.

The saloons should have been closed.

The crowds increased with the darkness, people coming in from the country even.

he affair, and business was almost entirelye tuspended, many houses being closed up. The day wore on with the tragedy, the only thought of the people, but before it closed an event was to transpire which would prove the spark necessary to produce the great conflagration which swept over Birmingham that night. It was the finding of Mrs. Hawes's body. All during the day there seemed to be a consensus of opinion, uniting all classes, that the bodies of the missing mother and baby girl would be found, and among hundreds who were freely expressing extreme views around the hotels, saloons and other places of general resort, there were suggestions that certain elements of society were only waiting for some such finally conclusive development to take the law in their own hands, or, at any rate, make an attempt of that kind. The moral atmosphere, while placid enough on the surface, gave indications that caused grave uncasiness among the friends of law and order. Soon after the noon hour the page in the story was turned, which converted Birmingham into a wild, surging, reckless mob. Parties who had been dragging the lake struck something near the little flower-covered island in the center of the pool. The hooks were lowered and when they grappled the weight below was drawn up. The men pulled with a shaky hand and as the water broke away from the object they were lifting, the body of a woman was brought to view.

It was Mrs. Hawes.

The body was laid in the boat and carried to the shore, and around it a large crowd congregated at once. The skin on the face and hands was drawn into wrinkles by the water and bleached a deathly whiteness. All the woman's beauty had faded and her most ardent admirer in her palmy days could not have recognized the beauty who once stirred the hearts of those who knew her, in the gruesome body dragged from the weeds body dragged from the weeds and wasting waters. Around both ankles, around the body, and around the neck were pieces of a bell cord, and by these heavy iron fish plates were fastened to the body to hold it down. Her skull was crushed in body to hold it down. body to hold it down. Her skull was crushed in behind by a terrible blow, exposing the brain. Those who saw the body brought out declared that the features of the corpse, rigid as they were in death, had preserved a look of freezing terror that, if it signified anything, signified the consciousness of impending murder. It those orbs, stretched abnormally open in terror could have been photographed sucin terror, could have been photographed s cessfully, what a tale they might have told.

THE STORY OF THE RIOT. The discovery of the body flew over the city like a prairie fire, leaving in its track unmis-takable signs of the danger lurking in the minds of the people. On Saturdays Birmingham always has its population temporarily increased by accessions from a dozen tributary mining and manu-facturing towns, the denizens of which come nor after rumor was circulated, adding to the existing excitement. The heavy gloon hanging over the city made otherwise con servative people say things and advocate measures which had only been spoken in whispers while the light of day shone. Before whispers while the light of day shone. Before eight o'clock it became apparent to the most skeptical that an attempt would be made to take Hawes from the jail and hang him. No attempt was made to disperse the crowds, but at the jail the sheriff was organizing a guard armed with Winchesters and shotguns. Then to prevent a surprise the sheriff threw out a line of pickets, instructing them to fall back in front of any advance and under no circumstances to fire. The guard at the jail was placed upon the root, in the second story and upon the courthouse just across the alley from the jail. These had been quickly but thoroughly drilled by Smith, and there instructions were positive not to fire until ordered to do so by the sheriff. "Under no circumstance pull a trigger," to fire until ordered to do so by the sheriff.

"Under no circumstance pull a trigger," saic the sheriff, "until I order you to fire; then shoot, and shoot to kill."

The mouth of the ten-feet alley leading up to the jail was guarded, and the defensive arrangements, as planned by Joe Smith, were entirely adequate to repel an assault carefully organized and intelligently led by trained soldiers.

diers.

By 9 o'clock the various crowds began to meet on Twenty-first street, at Third avenue. That street leads to the jail, and up it the mobs began to surge. Slowly at first they moved along the street, at first silently but before half the block had been traversed the mob was whooping and howling. lowling. "Blow up the jail."
"Hang Hawes and Fannie Bryant to a lamp

"Burn 'em."

"Burn 'em."
Such were some of the cries, and they indicated, too, that whisky rather than a desire for revenge was directing the mob. In the front ranks, however, were sober men, men held high by the people of Birmingham. They were counselling order and begging the crowd to turn back.

But there was no turn back in that mob.

But there was no turn back in that mob.

They were on their way to the jail and nothing short of the resolute Smith, as his guard, could stop them. Those who were begging for peace were pushed aside, and on to the jail the mob now thoroughly wild, went. At the mouth of the alley they were challenged by the guard. A derisive laugh is the answer as the guard fell back followed by the mob. One third the way up the alley the crowd was met by Sheriff Smith alone.

"You must go back, men," he said, "you have crossed the dead line."

Yells of derision followed the order.

"You can not come any further," said the sheriff. "I shall count three and if you don't leave I'll order my men to fire."

in to the city for their shopping, marketing, amusement and dissipation. Considering the excitement which had preceded the event, it was very unfortunate that the body of Mrs. Hawes should have been brought to light at such a time. The miners and laboring people of this district are just as good and respectable on the average as the same class anywhere of this district are just as good and respectable on the average, as the same class anywhere else; but they are very like their prototypes elsewhere; they are easily moved from the emotional standpoint and are apt to be ugly when they unite in the belief that a fiendish crime has been perpetrated under circumstances and conditions leading them to believe that there is any chance for the criminal crossingle to escape number to the criminal control of the conditions of the criminal control of the criminal criminal control of the criminal c

The crowds that surrounded the undertaker's establishment of Lockwood & Miller all day Saturday, as well as other crowds that congregated around the corners of every principal gated around the corners of every principal street, were not vicious crowds; but, one and all, they presented evidences of a disposition to take desperate means to reach a desperate case in the event that their worst fears should be realized. A number of citizens, familiar with urban outbreaks, had been more than worried from early in the morning; but when the news reached the masses that the body of the butchered wife had been found, all loaded down with rope and iron, and all bloody from the cruel blows that had murdered her, there was at once such a movement upon the streets as, anywhere else, would have been the signal for turning out every element of repressive force that the community could of repressive force that the community could command, or evolve or borrow.

Colonel Jones, who had left Birmingham for Atlanta on Saturday morning, confident under the assurances of the civil authorities that no trouble was likely to occur under any conceivable circumstances, was startled as he sate a dimer party in Geografic, meta-coolis by ta a dinner party in Georgia's metropolis by having a telegram handed him from the governor of Alabama, repeating a message which the state executive had just received from Major G. "Fire and be damned!" yelled a man in the Sheriff Smith retreated to the platform in front of the jail entrance, and standing there alone, facing the angry mob with no one in sight, repeated his order. Then he began to Instantly, a solid sheet of flame poured from the jail roof, the jail windows and the courthouse. Then came the shape reports of the Winchesters. For fully a minute the darkness was made brilliant by the flashing gun powder and the air laden with the rapid discharge of guns. Then as quickly as it began, it stopped, and darkness and stillness returned. But the alley was clear.

Standing upon the platform was the sheriff. Throughout the firing he remained there a target for those in the mob who wanted to fire. And many of them did fire.

The stillness was only momentary. Then it was broken by the groans and cries of the wounded and dying. From all sides the piteous cries came, and, with a heavy heart, Sheriff Smith walked down the alley to investigate. At his feet he found dead and dying men, and, with a hand as tender as it was steady, a minute before, he ministered to them. In a few minutes the town knew of the shooting, and Hawes and his murdered wife and childer were for the-time forgotten. The popular fury was transferred from the miscore. dren were for the time forgotten. The popular fury was transferred from the prisoner to Sheriff Smith and for several days he had a tough time of it. The dead were carried from jutant general, and the general of division, as | the field and corpses and wounded men rested

The wildest excitement prevailed, and nothing definite could be obtained. The dead and wounded were multiplied and exexaggerated out of reason and it was not until the next day that the truth could be learned. Then a list was compiled, and here it is:

"And is there much talk about this affair!"

"Everybody is talking about it."

He dropped his head, and, pulling his mustache nervously a second, asked: "And what do they say? What do they think!"

"Some think you are innocent. Others are satisfied that you are guilty."

Again he began playing with his beard. He appeared to be thinking deeply.

"And there are more," he said, "who think me guilty?"

The children I could not have killed, because my heart was too full of love for them. The mother I would not have killed, because we were apart."

He fairly shuddered ashe spoke and glaring around the cell said:

"See, see these iron bars. They shut me out from freedom and action. They keep me from beside my first child, my girl, whom I loved so much. They keep me from searching for my baby girl. His wound was through and through, but he lived until 9 o'clock Sunday morning. He was postmaster at Birmingham and was a popular man. He breathed his last in a room at the boarding house just across the street from the jail. His death was caused by wounds received while standing in a crowd, into which the officers fired. Mr. Thockmorton had just arrived on the scene of action, and finding several of his friends in the yard in front of the boardinghouse, went in to be with them. When he saw the crowds pressing toward the front. he stepped up to the yard in front of the boardinghouse, went in to be with them. When he saw the crowds pressing toward the front, he stepped up to the fence and tried to reason with them, and beg them to go to their homes. While he was in the act of pacifying the crowd he was shot. The ball struck him in the lower part of the stomach. He fell, and asked that his wife be sent for at Lakeview. He was picked up and carried into the house, and Dr. Luckie called. Mrs. Throckmorton arrived in half an hour, and all that could be done was done for the relief of the suffering man. VI. HOW HAWES STOOD THE RIOT.

So thoroughly under control was he that he actually went to sleep, and from that sleep he was aroused by the firing.

When the firing began he got up, put on his shoes and laced them. Then he dressed slowly and carefully, putting on his collar and adjusting his necktie. Then he put on his overcoat, and, grabbing the bars of his cell door, stood up to await the result. Throughout the battle he remained there coolly awaiting the issue, and later in the night undressed again and went to sleep. Soon after the fighting ceased I visited Hawes in his cell, accompanied by the sheriff. He was then lying upon his bunk. the sheriff. "That's so," said he.

His head dropped again. No one in the "These bars are hard and strong. If I could only rend them apart and go to the side of the woman whom I once loved so, and who have but wish."

He picked up his shoes, which were on the floor in front of him, and, pushing them under the bed, straightened up with a groan.

THE DAY AFTER.

THE DAY AFTER.

Intelligence of the riot had gone over the wires to the four quarters of the globe, and all day long the eyes of the world were upon Birmingham, anticipating more bloodshed.

Telegrams of inquiry poured into the city all day.

So did state troops.

Early in the morning Colonel Jones reached Birmingham from Atlanta, and about the same time the Montgomery Greys, Captain Jones commanding, the Montgomery True Blues, Captain Bibb commanding, the Montgomery True Blues, Captain Bibb commanding, the Montgomery Mounted Rifles, Captain Wily commanding, and the Montgomery Field Artillery, Captain Clisby commanding, came. And two gatling guns with one three-inch rifle gun.

These troops were encamped at the jobl and the city was placed under millitary rule. Colonel Jones established his headquarters at the new court house and from that point directed his work. Throughout the morning ugly rumors were current and about 10 o'clock it was stated upon good authority that a crowd of five hundred miners were on their way to town to hang Hawes. An hour later a large crowd congregated on a vacant lot near the courthouse and from then threats of violence emanated. Colonel Jones sent an officer to them advising them to disperse but they only langhed. Then he went himself, but received the same treatment. In all Alabama there is no more determined man than Colonel Jones, and at once his mind was made up and his troop were in motion.

His messenger was jeered by both gangs, and then the colonel turned to Captain Jones, of the Montgomery Greys, saying:

"Cantain Jones, clear that street."

of the Montgomery Greys, saying:

Captain Jones had the Greys deployed across the street in a second. Then, at his command, bayonets were fixed and the company started off. The company moved like old veterant. The crowd hooted. Colonel Jones turned to his men and saids "Load!

Instantly every man obeyed.

The crowd grew silent. Then the colones "Ready?"

"Aim!" commanded the colonel.

With great precision every soldier threw his eye along the barrel of his gun.

The mob saw it, and just as every one expected to hear Colonel Jones order the troops to fire he called out:

"Recover!"

"Recover!"
In a second every gun went up.
And then it was discovered that the mob was moving away, and moving fast.
Colonel Jones is an old confederate vetera, and one of the finest soldiers in the south. He is a thorough disciplinarian, and, though astremely strict, is beloved by every man in the

"I have runners in all directions, and will be informed of any advance. I can hardly believe the rumors true."

"Then do you apprehend any further trouble?" he was asked.

"I have refused all interviews," said the colonel. "But if there is one great paper onearth it is The ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, and

"Those boys, do you know," said the colonel, pointing toward his troops, "are the pick of Alabama, the grand old state. They are brave and fearless. Some people may think they would scare at the crack of a gun, but let me say they would stand there and fight until the last man died rather than to disobey an order."

"Do you think you will have another assault to contend with?"

"Tings only can answer that question.

"Tings only can answer that question. I hope not, but you know we cannot always tell. The men who want Hawes are not only braye, but they are reckless."

During the day the terrible massacre of the previous night was discussed, and the sheriff was freely censured. He paid no attention to the censure, however, and remained at his post until he was arrested in the afternoon by the coroner. His arrest was based upon a warrant charging him with killing the people who gave up their lives in the battle Saturday night. The feeling against him was intense, but he bore it all with an equanimity almost remarkable, and when, months afterwards, he was tried and acquitted, his people had begun to look at his work of that terrible night as his warmest friends, and the Sanday passed away without any further trouble. A heavy gloom hung over the town, and all day long the bells were tolled for the dead. Nearly every hour brought to light another wounded man, until the discovery failed fo excite comment. The night, too, were away without a renewal of the trouble, and Monday without a renewal of the trouble, and Monday morning brought with it rain, and Governor Seay. The rain was a cold, drenching one, and did more to thin the crowds upon the streets than the military had done. Governor Seay held a long conference with the mayor, the chief of police, Sheriff Smith, and several prominent citizens, and then issued an address to the people. With Monday the excitement began to diminish, and on Tuesday everything was so quiet that Governor Seay left and the military companies one after another went away. By Wednesday everything was at peace and that night the last of the militia went home.

The Birmingham rlot was a thing of the past, but years from now stories of the terrible tragedy will be listened to with interest. VIII.

LITTLE IRENE'S BODY FOUND.

With the riot every one became convinced of Hawes' guilt, and search for Irene's body was confined only that it might be given a was co: mucdonly that Christi burial.
No c. doubted that the child had been mether.

The lake was drained, and day after day the search went on. On Saturday, just one week after the mother was found, the baby girl was fished out of the lake. That evening Jim Hawes sat upon the bank of the lake watching a man in a boat as he drifted about feeling for the body. Late in the evening the hook sunk by the searcher struck something, and he pulled it to the surface. It was the body of the lost baby, and the cruel hook of the bighearted officer had caught the fleshy part of the little girl's right lower limb. When the gentlemen had drawn her into the boat, they found that she had been weighted down to the bottom with heavy irons of the same character as those which had been attached to the body of her mother, and which are known as curvebraces. There were two of them attached with ropes in front of her chest, and her body had, of course, fallen face downward, and lay that way on the bottom. The rope had first been tied around the girl's neck, brought around to the rear, carried under the shoulders and tied to the weights under the chest.

As the body was laid upon the ground Jim The lake was drained, and day after day the chest.

As the body was laid upon the ground Jim Hawes glanced at it, and then, turning away with a shudder, said:
"That's Irene, Dick Hawes's second daughter."

The body was in front of the pavilion when The body was in front of the pavilion when I first saw it, and around it stood a crowd of men, women and children. The ladies and children were crying as though their hearts would break, and even the men, enured to heartless scenes, could not keep back the tears which came unbidden to their eyes. They stood around the body covered with a sheet as though in awe of what was there. Only two weeks before the pretty faced, light hearted, six-year-old child trusted the man who put her to death, only as a child can trust a parent.

terribly drawn and wrinkled. She was almost a picture of May, so strong was the resemblance between the sisters. That the child's life went out amidst great suffering was apparent to those who glanced at the features; then, too, the lower lip was caught between the fixed jaws, indicating that the little one had been in great pain.

The body was removed to the undertakers and there a jury of inquest quickly charged her death to Dick Hawes. Then she was taken to the cemetry and laid to rest beside her mother and sister. When Hawes was informed of the discovery he looked at the officers steadily, and without any concern, in his usual voice, asked:

"Have you a cigarette?"

The officers gave him a cigarette and a match and after he began to smoke he asked:

"Where was the body found?"

The discovery was related to him, and throughout the recital he displayed no feeling of interest, horror or anything else. Then when the recital was finished he walked to the other side of his cell, and in silence smoked up his cigarette.

side of his cell, and in silence smoked up his cigarette.

Jim Hawes, the brother, wanted to take charge of the bodies of the woman and two children and carry them to Atlanta, where the Pettis family have a lot in Oakland.

But the coroner refused the request.

The people of Birmingham are generous and open-hearted, and a popular subscription defrayed the funeral expenses, purchased a lot in the cemetery, and gave a small monument to each. And in this way the daughter and her children are laid in a burial ground, nearly two hundred miles away from the graves of her father, mother and sisters.

HAWES'S LAST MARRIAGE. And for the death of these three Dick Hawes

And for the death of these three Dick Hawes hangs tomorrow.

Why did he kill them?
The love or mad infatuation which possessed him for one of the prettiest, most popular young ladies in Columbus, Miss. Hawes and Miss Story met by accident, and while he was smitten with her beautiful face and plasant manners, she was infatuated with his neat, gentlemanly appearance. The first meeting was fellowed up, and in a short time she and Hawes were engaged. Then rumors of Hawes's past life reached her and her parents, and when he was confronted with the story of a living wife and three children, he made a statement apparently so open, so candid that it was accepted. "I have been married." he said, "but I have

HIS LAST HOURS a divorce from my wife. I have one child, a a divorce from my wife. I have one child, a small boy, but no other children."

Then when he called upon Miss Story again, exhibited what appeared to be a court record of his divorce. This removed all doubt and the courtship went on bringing happiness to both. Then the wedding day came and the marriage was the society event of the place. From the bride's home they were driven to the depot, and began a trip to Augusta.

to Augusta.

How that trip was interrupted by the arrest of Hawes is too well known.

Since the cruel blow Miss Story has remained quietly at home, shrinking from the public. Attempt after attempt has been made to bring her before the public, but she has persistently refused to talk until a month ago, when I secured an interview with her.

HAWES IN JAIL.

HAWES IN JAIL.

Before his conviction, Hawes was as light hearted as any prisoner in the jail, and indulged in all games to which prisoners resort to pass away the time.

But his conviction brought a change.

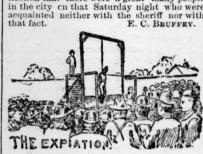

In the days before the sentence was passed upon him, Hawes acted as judge in the jail court, and when a new prisoner was brought. court, and when a new prisoner was brought in, the wife murderer saw that the punishin, the wife murderer saw that the punishment decreed was meeted out to him. Since he became able to measure the length of his life he began to change, and received the calls of a priest with great delight. But during all this time he did not forget how to swear, and it is said that on the day Wyly was last released he swore like a sailor. The last few weeks of his life were passed in making confessions and denying them, and in threats to cheat the gallows by suiciding. A confession he made two weeks ago, in which he charged John Wyly with assisting him in the murder, is well-remembered. Then upon that confession Wyly was arrested and carried to Birmingham, but a committal trial resulted in his release.

SHERIFF SMITH.

SHERIFF SMITH.

The man who risked his life to save Dick Hawes's from the infuriated mob and will hang him is an Alabamian.

John S. Smith was elected sheriff in August, 1888, and has served the people faithfully. He is thirty-five years of age and a native of Jefferson county. He is very small but a fine speciman of manhood. His father was a colonel in the confederate army rnd was killed leading a desperate charge at Vicksburg. The sheriff passed the early days of his life upon a plantation, leaving it for the mercantile business, in which he was engaged when elected sheriff. He is a man of determination, mettle and nerve, and the knowledge that he had these points in his make-up satisfied all who knew him that should there be any attempt to take the prisoners away from him, there would certainly be some shooting, and not any at all with blank cartridges. It is a lamentable reflection that there were a great many people in the city on that Saturday night who were acquainted neither with the sheriff nor with

AWAKENED FROM A DREAM.

"Dir' Cheap" Insurance That is Not so Cheap DETROIT, Mich., February 22.—One year ago S. L. Dinkelspiel, a sharp, plausible, oily-tongued man, employed by the New York Life Insurance company as a special agent, came to Detroit. He first waited on the McMillan firm and delivered himself as follows: "I am commissioned by the president of the "an commissioned by the president of the New York Life Insurance company to take out policies under new and advantageous inducements to the insurer. We wish to place ten one-hundred-thousand-dollar policies in Detroit."

He then proceeded to explain the details of the plan to each of the members of the firm, the premium being of different amounts, according to the age of the person addressed. To W. C. McMil-lan, son of the senator, he said: "The first premium on your one-hundred-thousand-dollar premium of your one-maturet-mousant-monar policy on the ten-year plan will be $4,210. During the succeeding nine years you will receive your policy share of one-fifth of 1 per cent of the premiums received by the company in the state of Michigan during the year 1889. This will reach policy share of one-fifth of 1 per cent of the premiums received by the company in the state of Michigan during the year 1889. This will reach the sum of $2,000 per year and more, but I will give a written guarantee that it will be $1,500. At the end of the ten years, if you survive, you will receive $30,000 in cash."

The proposition had nice features about it. It was a select millionaire crowd. The rebate was handsome and the final payment comfortable. The "slick" agent raked in between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 of insurance, clearing a handsome sum in commissions. his original ten persons being pushed up to thirty, and jucluding many of the notabilities of the town. Then Dinkelspiel departed, visited other large places in Michigan, exhibited his Detroit list of naboba, and gathered in a goodly array of others, altogether making an extremely profitable trip.

The second year's premiums are now due, and the policy holders are rudely awakened from their dream of dirt-cheap life insurance by the information that the company will hold them to the letter of its policies. It will allow the promised rebate on the total premiums collected in Michigan in 1839, according to Dinkelspiel's order, but will not honor his oral guaranties that this percentage would fnot be less than $1,500. Rebates have therefore, fallen to $200 or $300, and great is the wrath over the discovery.

It is now to be seen that to be able to pay the promised $1,500 on each policy, the company would have had to do in this single state a business of $00,000,000 last year. Some are disposed to quietly laugh over their guilibility, but the anger of others takes on a sulphurous form. One of the victins, Mr. James W. Fales, has sued the company for the premium which he paid on making his application, and which he demanded back after reading the policy sent him. His request was denied, and he and his attorney leave for New York the first of the week to take depositions, Mr. Fales avows that the presentations made to him were not made good in the terms o

The Ohio Steadily Coming Up at Cincinnati-

Factories Stopped.
Cincinnati, February 27.—At 5 o'clock this morning the Ohio river had reached fifty-three feet. At noon today the river had reached fifty-four feet and two inches, and was rising at the rate of one and a half inches an hour. Besides, the thermometer stood at fifty-one degrees, the sky overcast, and a southeast wind was blowing. Reports from points above show that the river is rising at all points from Pittsburg down. At Portsmouth, 150 miles above Cincinnati, the rise was an inch an hour. To add to the difficulty of realizing the extent of the flood, there is a report of a fall of nearly an inch of rain in Kentucky. This would check the fall if it did not cause another rise in the Big Sandy. Nobody ventures to say what may be expected because no one can predict the course of the storm now central ln eastern Arkansas If it passes northeastwardly the natural result would be a rainfall all through the Ohio valley, and a still greater rise. But on the other hand, twenty-four hours without rain will cause the river to fall. The ironworks and sawmills of Newport, Ky., stopped this morning. Others will follow soon in Covington and this city, where the water encroaches or them. Railroad communication is growing hourly more uncertain on the more exposed roads, and it is possible that trains cannot get into the central passenger station by night.

THE TENNESSEE LEGISLATURE. Many Bills of Importance Up for Discu

Nashville, Tenn., February 27.—[Special.]
The only thing of interest in the Tennessee legislature is the prolonged discussion in the house on the bill making the payment of poll tax a condition precedent to voting. The republicans were solid against it, and the democrats divided. The discussion occupied both morning and evening, and finally failed of passage by two votes of a constitutional majority. It will be reconsidered.

Little foxes of expense-lamp chimneys - they cost a trifle apiece; but they break so!

That is a needless extravagance. . There are chimneys that do not break; they cost no more at your dealer's than brittle ones, if he has them; and he will get them if you insist.

Brittle chimneys make double appeal to a dealer's cupidity. Cost is almost nothing and sales are constant.

Tough chimneys cost more at wholesale, but not enough more to compel a higher price. The dealer loses the difference Then they last indefinitely. It takes a bright man to see his advantage in selling them. "Pearl-top" chimneys, beth & Co., Pittsburgh, are tough. If they break in use, the dealer is paid to give you new ones.

The makers will send you a primer about them.

ATLANTA, GA., FEBRUARY 28, 1890.

Concerning Population. A writer in the Memphis Avalanche says that we are better off without a dense popu-

If we were crowded together like the peo ple of Belgium, it would be a bad thing, because we cannot equal the Belgians in making the soil productive, and our mode of living is more expensive.

We make a mistake in desiring unlimited immigration. Undoubtedly immigrants would build up the country. Railroads would have more freight and passengers for awhile, but more railroads would be built, and the profits of all would be cut. Merchants would sell more goods for awhile, but more merchants would spring up to compete with them. Land owners would get bigger prices for their land, but they could not reinvest without paying at the same rate.

With a big population men would find it harder to earn a living. The fewer people there are in a country, the simpler are the wants of the average citizen, and the easier It is to supply them. Suppose Atlanta had a million inhabitants? She would have a few very rich people, and hundreds of thousands of half-starving desperate poor. Where would be the gain?

But our Memphis contemporary admits that it will be generations before the evils of a dense population will be felt, especially in the south. For sometime to come immigration and our natural increase will build up new and bigger markets for our farmers, and all classes will be benefitted. Up to a certain point the growth of our population will be a positive benefit, and we ean well afford for the next fifty years to welcome new settlers. Still, we are not dependent upon immigration. The steady progress of the south since the war, mainly through the enterprise and energy of southern men, shows that even with the national government and other sec-tions arrayed against us we can enjoy a reasonable agree of prosperity and happi-

We have good reason to be satisfied with the situation. If immigrants come there is room for them. If they stay away we can fill the fields ourselves.

He is Answered.

A correspondent, writing from Belleville, Kansas, informs us that northeners cannot and will not come south because they would meet social and political ostracism.

Our Kansas letter writer asks how our people would treat an old man visiting our historic points of interest if they found out that he was William Lloyd Garrison.

Well, the people who tried to elect Horace Greeley to the presidency would find it an easy matter to treat William Lloyd Garrison courteously if he visited the earth again After the recent friendship and literary partnership existing between Jefferson Davis and James Redpath, it is nonsense to say that a respectable republican and abolitionist of the old-time stripe who comes down here and behaves himself, would meet with anything but fair and pleasant treatment. Red path was once our bitter enemy. -Now he is filling the magazines with his praise of Jefferson Davis, whose kind heart and lofty character greatly impressed him while he was enjeying the hospitalities of Beauvoir.

A republican who is a good citizen, trying to build up the country, wili find when he settles in the south that his neighbors do not care anything about his polltics. They will help him in business and outvote him in

A New Negro Society.

It is said that a brand new colored society, with a purpose behind it, has betn organized in Kansas. Heretofore, we have had "The Rastlin' Daughters of Jacob," "The Breeding Doves of Zion," "The Weeping Sisters' and "The Lovers of the Morning Star," all with benevolent purposes; but it is reported that the Kansas society is a regular stingaree that means business.

It is called, according to the correspondent of the New York Herald, the "First Grand Independent Brotherhood," and it has for its purpose the future control of Oklahoma as a negro state. The feature of the society, however, is an oath which binds the members to opposition to the white race for all time, and pledges those who are of negro blood to always assist each other in the courts as against any of the white race.

The society has grown very rapidly, and it is still spreading over Kansas and the adjoining states. The white men in Kansas who have aided the negroes financially have already begun to feel the power of the new organization. During the years of crop failures many white men advanced money to the negroes, and now they refuse to pay the borrowed money. They go into court with an array of witnesses gathered from the society, and not only clear themselves of all indebtedness, but, in some instances, manage to bring their creditors in debt to them. In one instance, it is said, a white man has lost $27,000 representing the indebtedness of the negroes, and has had to pay, in addition to the court costs, over $2,000.

The organization has now turned its attention to colonizing Oklahoma, and it is making rapid strides in that direction. It is reported, on good authority, that the negroes in that region already outnumber the whites and they still continue to pour in from all parts of the south.

It is a very interesting affair-especially for the white republicans of Kansas.

What Shail Be Done With Them? Joe Howard, the newspaper writer, who is fuller of gossip than a Georgta campmeeting, sometimes hits on a practical matter, and when he does, he hits it hard. The seething and boiling child element in New York city has attracted his attention, and it is an element that is certainly worthy of attention. Some one in that 'ig town asks, "What shall be done w' girls?"

and Mr. Howard supplements this by inquiring, "What shall we do with our boys?"

There are three hundred thousand children going to school in New York, and fifty thousand are roaming the streets with nothing to do, apt apprentices in the professions of idleness and crime. In addition, there are eight thousand messenger boys, of whom two thousand go out of service every year. Considering these things, Mr. Howard asks what is to be done with them. It is an interesting question, and it is one that only time can answer. Every place in the teeming metropolis seems to be full and running over, and yet there is still room, even in that town, for the apt, the bright, the courageous, the industrious and the earnest ones. Some of these boys will go wrong, some will be driven to the wall, some will graduate as criminals, some will seek home otherwhere, but the great majority will make their way and take the places of those who are continually dropping out. We shall see here the survival of the fittest, the success of the brightest and the strongest, and in it all behold the gentle hand of Providence, winnowing the wheat from the chaff, stirring the hearts of sordid men, and protecting these human sparrows that now run chirping about the streets.

The Story of a Remarkable Crime. THE CONSTITUTION presents this mornlng the full story of the crime for which Richard Hawes will be hung today in Birmingham.

The story is one of the most remarkable in the annals of crime. Since the murder of little May and Irene Hawes and their mother, a dozen persons have lost their lives as the sesult of that crime, which the law has fixed upon Dick Hawes, and for which he will today pay the death penalty. The story of the storming of the Birmingham jail, and of the gallant defense of the prisoner by Sheriff Smith, and of the lives lost in the encounter, is fresh in the memory of those who have followed the details of the fatal

THE CONSTITUTION devotes considerable space this morning to the recital of the circumstances surrounding the crime, and of the subsequent details, concerning which so much has already been said. Mr. Bruffey's story reads more like a romance-a chapter of fiction-than the picturing of a chapter of real life.

The Hawes family were well known in Atlanta where they lived before they moved to Birmingham, and it is probable that the reports concerning the crime have been read with as much interest in Atlanta as in Birmingham.

In this connection it is not out of place for THE CONSTITUTION to say that its superior facilities for obtaining and distributing the news have been demonstrated to a marked degree in our reports of everything concerning the affair, from the finding of the dead bodies to the confession of Hawes a few days ago.

Atlanta's New Line to Florida.

In an interview in another column Colonel R. F. Maddox, president of the Atlanta and Florida railroad company, fully explains why the stock of that road and the stock in the Georgia Improvement company is worth more now than before the combination with the Georgia Southern.

President Maddox bases his estimates on good business rules, and we agree with him that his statements are conservative, and that it is highly probable the net earnings of the road will increase each year over his estimates. If he is correct the stock of the Improvement company is worth con siderably more than par, because this company owns the entire issue of the stock of the Atlanta and Florida, except about $70,000. Therefore the earnings of the road, after paying the interest on the bonded debt, which President Maddox says is $50,000 per annum, will go in the stock dividends of the Atlanta and Florida. The value of all stock is governed entirely by the dividends paid on it, and with this stock earning good dividends there is uo reason why it should not be very valuable. The bond on this road is very lowonly about $8,000 per mile, and even with this bonded indebtedness on the road it leaves nearly, or quite, $200,000 in the treasury of the company unexpended, which will be used to procure better terminal facilities when present contracts expire.

The contract made by President Maddox was not only a splendid one for Atlanta, but for the stockholders. It has given some who have been very despondent more faith in the enterprise. It will give them back the money they invested, and a handsome profit besides. Only a week ago all the stockholders wanted to sell, and no one wanted to buy. Now, none of the stockholders want to sell, and there is a growing demand for the stock at higher prices.

Another benefit to the city of Atlanta is the certainty that this transaction will turn loose nearly half a million of dollars that was almost regarded as lost. The other day, as it were, nobody would loan a dollar on the stock, and those who were compelled to sell had to do so at a great sacrifice. The stock can now be counted as assets in any business transaction, and assets worth mor than par.

Dakota's Destitution. The first reports of the destitution in South Dakota were denied, but a Chicago paper sent to that state what it calls an 'emissary." and this emissary found that the situation in South Dakota was fully as bad as had been reported.

Those who were interested in denying the reports were the professional boomers-real estate agents with land to sell, money-lenders with mortgages in their vaults, railroad managers, and politicians with axes to grind. These denials have had the effect of staying the hand of charity, and the probability is that when spring strikes that bleak and barren region the farmers will still be suffering for the necessaries of life.

There is one fact that ought to be rem bered, and that is that the people who suffer from blizzards and starvation in the northwest have themselves to blame. There are thousands and thousands of acres of land in the south, as fertile as any on earth, that can be had for a song, and yet farmers in the west are pushing for the northwest, and immigrants rush to where hunger and destitution are waiting to welcome them with crops? The northern republican editors politicians and sectionalists are against us but the winds of heaven and the beautiful easons are for us—and these shall finally win. The movement hitherward has already begun, and it will increase year by year until the power and influence of the south, once more, controls the destinies of the nation.

Tom PLATT should be made director-general of the world's fair at Chicago. He did i with his little battle-ax.

NEW YORK can now take a slice of her fair unds and build the Grant monument

AMPT is coming to the front in Ohio once more. Ampt is a democrat who patriotic tries to keep the republicans in hot water. St. Louis regards the vote on the world' fair as complimentary to the west. So it is. It is another reasan why the west should join hands with the south and destroy the dragon of sectionalism that has its den in the east.

THE republicans have shown that the poasted surplus isn't a drop in the bucket. THE matter of nullification seems to weigh heavily on Editor Halstead's stomach. EDITORIAL COMMENT.

MR. GEORGE E. DALTON, 18 South Main street

to write to him in reference to a meeting on the battlefield of Chicamauga sometime in May. He says in his circular: "I suppose you are aware that steps are being taken to make the battlefield of Chicamauga a national park, land to erect on the field proper monuments to designate where the various commands of the opposing forces were ocated at the different important times of the battle. You are doubtless also aware that there is battle. You are doubtless also aware that there is much dispute as to the positions occupied by many of the commands on the field—especially is this the case as to the regiments under Steedman, which fought to the west of the Enodgrass house, on "Snodgrass," or "Horse Shoe," or "Battery" ridge, as it is variously called—also, as to the confederate forces opposing them. That these questions may be certified beyond any further, inhance of discourse. be settled beyond any further chance of dispu locate the positions occupied by their various commands; and it is greatly desired that as many as possible be present for that purpose. LABOUCHERE went over to Paris, says a London cable to the New York Sun, to take a look at the trial of the young duke, and his views as to the personality of the pretender differ from these expressed in the monarchical newspapers, He says "As a pretender, I prefer Boulanger to t duke. Boulanger is a bon diable, and mo manly, perhaps less rather than more. The hope of the house of France is a cross between petit creve and a smart young officer of a crack regi-ment, without any idea beyond those subjects which are discussed at mess. He is tall, of fresh complexion, has neat features, and could no fai as an ensign trooping colors to steal away the hearts of nursery maids and romatic young ladies, if they were not physiogno-mists enough to see that the eres mists enough to see that the ees are harsh, unpleasant, and dull, and that although the has lost the pudding contour which made hm an ugly boy, the domination of stomach over mid is still shown in his cheeks. His light-brown hair, of a dull shade, is parted, masher-like, in the middle, and is slightly curled. As to dress, it was irreproachable and carefully careless. I could trace a resemblance in the cut of his features to the late duke of Orleans, but the countenance was not his, and betrayed a mind on very shall pat-tern, a good deal of vanity, and a temper mee riscible than sunny. THE ST. LOUIS GLOBE-DEMOCRAT says that St. Louis lost the world's fair through too much wind and too little work. This is understood to be slap at Editor Jones, of the Republic.

THE TENNESSEANS are having a spirited gubernatorial canvass. West Tennessee claims that it is her time to furnish a governor, and the interest centers in the city of Memphis, where the candilates talked of are Josiah Patterson and Luc Clapp. Outside of Memphis there is talk of Hon Ben Lee, Hon. William Daniels and Hon. Jere Baxter. Despite the number of popular candidate ught by a good many that if Congres Senton McMillin enters the race he will be the Captain W. W. Gordon. From the Savannah News.

Our friends of the rural press, and particularly Our friends of the rural press, and particularly those who have been asserting that, Mr. duBignon having withdrawn, no Savannah man has any hance of getting the democratic nomination for governor, appear to have forgotten that Colonel W. W. Gordon lives in Savannah. He may not be best governors Georgia ever had. Is there an in-telligent man in the state who does not know that he is one of the ablest members of the legis-lature, and that during his service in that body he lature, and that during his service in that body he has shown exceptionally clear judgment and great intelligence in dealing with public affairs? During the last session of the legislature, and also the previous session, no other member commanded more attention in debate, and no other one was listened to with more pleasure. The reason was that he always had something to say that was worth hearing. He made himself master of his subject before he attempted to enlighten others with respect to it. Indeed, it is not too much to say that for solid attainments Colonel Gordon has say that for solid attainments Colonel Gordon has no superior in the legislature.

He may not be ambitious to be governor, and it is quite certain that he is not going to seek the office, great as the office is. The people, however, may take a notion that it would be a good thing for them to have a man in the executive chair for them to have a man in the executive chair whose chief ambition would be to advance their interests in every way in his power, and who would bring to the discharge of his duties a wide e with the affairs of the state and the finest kind of business qualifications.

Colonel Gordon is just such a man as the people want for governor. They would search a long time before finding any reasonable objection to him. He has been a faithful and conscientions him. He has been a faithful and conscientious public servant since he has been in the legislature, and he would continue to be such a servant if he were chosen governor. It may be found difficult to make a choice from among those who are now recognized as candidates. In fact several of them will have disappeared from the contest before the delegates to the nominating convention are selected. It would not be surprising, therefore, if those who know Colonel Gordon's worth should direct attention to him, and it would be still less surprising if he should have a host of friends in the nominating convention.

tion in the south as the result of a failure of BEWARE OF PLATT'S TIP

ds of the Boss Tempted to Buy Tenne see Coal and Iron Stock and Then Quietly Wiped Out.

From the New York Times,
It was a Thomas C. Platt day in Wall street as well as in Washington yesterday, and some more or less distinguished patriots who have followed the statesman from the political cau-cus into the stock exchange are a little wiser and a good deal wearier.

It happened some months ago that there went up a loud call for reform in the management of the southern pig-iron-making company the southern pig-iron-making company known as the Tennessee Coal and Iron company, and Statesman Thomas C. Platt was made president. He was selected on the law of averages. As he had never done any reforming it was argued that he must be about ripe for a little novelty of that sort.

Tennessee Coal stock was about $30 a share when the Platt bull pool took hold. It was $90 a share a few days ago. Yesterday it sold at $51 a share. The whole slump has come within two or three days. Yesterday the stock opened at 69½, and forthwith it slumped to 51,

Wall street hasn't had anything like such a performance in many a day. But the chiefly entertaining point in the record isn't merely that there was a break in prices and that son body therefore lost money. The entertainmen is in the list of who those somebodies happen to be. There is a theory that anybody can lose money in Wall street without trying very hard, but it isn't often that the stock exchange row. And that's what vesterday accomplished

The recent rise in Tennessee Coal's price about sixty points, has been one of street's wonders; everybody who bad sense could see that it was manipulated and given a fictitious market value through "washed" quotations and the other usual schemes that orofessional "operators" on the Stock Exchange know how to use in tempting gudgeon. Yet many a man was fooled-it is so easy to believe a stock can keep on going up forever. But cool-headed brokers have dema margins before they would buy it for their cus tomers, and in many brokerage offices there were even refusals to handle the stuff at all.

The politician often nibbles in Wall street. But never before has he had such "a sure thing" as Leader Platt's Tennessee Coal offered; never before was the ground floor so close and safe; never were profits so ready to fall plump and quick into open pockets. Perhaps Mr. Platt didn't have to urge his friends to come in and get some of the waiting wealth; possibly the patriots who help him s inside the breastworks were run thin selves anxious to take a flier. Anyhow, they got "in." They didn't get in at the bottom. Most of them were admitted to the deal only after there had been a rise of forty to fifty points. Seventy-five or so was about the quotation when the average co-statesman put up his tion when the average co-statesman put up his little margin and got ready to fatten his bank account. Such lucky gentlemen weren't merely the little fellows of local republican politics. In the list were gentlemen who get their names in black type on republican massmeeting programmes. One, at least, is, in his own mind, an 1892 presidential possibility. Others are notables of consequence in republican councils. And at the Fifth Avenue hotel, as well as in Wall street, these possessors of ground-floor privileges have been known and envied by lesser folks who didn't happen to be under the generous patronage of Statesman Thomas C. Platt.

Few of them were calculating on selling out under 150; that price had been fully fixed.

Thomas C. Platt.

Few of them were calculating on selling out under 150; that price had been fully fixed. Oh! it was a subject for boasting to have the Thomas C. Platt tip. Some of the fortunates were not born yesterday, though. There is Louis F. Payn, for instance. He got in early; he got out early, too. He took what Jay Gould calls "a big jag," and when he saw a profit in it he grabbed at the profit. Forty thousand dollars is said to have been what the lively Louis made. Not another case is the lively Louis made. Not another case is known where the politician fared so well. It was disloyalty to doubt that 150 was going to be the price of the stock, and the gentlemen waited. But yesterday every blessed one of them went the usual Wall street way. "Wiped out" is the stock exchange epi-Of course there were some able t

hr. Alger is very much in the minority among those who were yesterday celebrating the Platt style of "pointing."

Various hopeful southern gentlemen are redited with heavy losses through the smashup. One man who has been credited with making over $500,000 on paper by the recent naking over $500,000 on paper by the recent use was yesterday skurrying around in Wall street trying to borrow money to save his financial reputation.

The cause of the drop in quotations is variously explained. One report points to "inside sellling," somebody more or less closely resembling Thomas C. Platt selling out. There is nothing novel in that; if friends were to accept "points" how were they going to be able to buy unless somebody was self-sacrificing enough to sell to them? Statesmen Platt said, however, that the whole trouble came from a bear raid. It was stated on Wall street that one of the heaviest buyers of stock at the botbear raid. It was stated on Wall street that one of the heaviest buyers of stock at the bot-tom yesterday was John H. Inman, who was formerly at the head of the property and who was ousted from control by Statesman Platt's Wall street deal a year ago.

There is, therefore, a probability that States-man Platt will seen he on the retired list. He man Platt will soon be on the retired list. He will then have time to debate with himself and some other distinguished politicians a conundrum like this: "Where have I won most glory—in making my friends sick in Wal street, or in helping New York get the world's

But let not Thomas be discouraged. Does there not remain for him an opportunity to "d np" his political friends in a surer, safer way What's the matter with organizing a "blin

Ask me something easy. 1 can't answer about governor, but let me tell you, Tom Watson is going to stir up the congressional fight. He's the smartest little man in Georgia, and the little ones are the smartest ones, you know."

The mention of Watson's name made the enator enthusiastic.

"You know Tom Watson used to work for me. He wasn't much of a salesman, for he was intent upon reading everything he could get hold of. I told him he ought to be a lawyer, and the result has proved that I am right."

"Is he strong politically?" "That he is. Did you ever hear him make a stump speech? Well, sir, when you say he captures the crowd you tell the literal truth. Oh, I'm for Watson!"

The Louisville and Nashville. The New York Evening Post says of the Louisville and Nashville:

"The officers of the Louisville and Nashville railroad deserve great credit for the brilliant way in which the finances of that company have been managed. Louisville and Nashville stock was quoted at 25 cents in 1884, at 40 cents in 1885, at 60 cents in 1888, while today the offer of sale of a large addition the present shareholders at 85 cents is regarded as a favor. The exchange of stocks for bonds under this advancing value for the former is not only a proceeding to be encouraged. not only a proceeding to be encouraged by all who wish for sound priciples of railroad finance, but puts the Louisville and Nashville in the rank roads which command the attention of inverse. This happy result is owing to two thing First, the able manner in which the columns of the columns of the columns of the columns. manner in which the coal and fic of the road has been for branch line traffic of the road has branch line traffic of the road has been for-tered; the through or strictly competitive business has hardly held its own, and reliance upon that would have made the present re-sults impossible. Next, the moderation of the shareholders in allowing betterments to be paid for in stock at par (for this is what the matter amounts to), rather than by compelling a distribution of the sur-plus income and the issue of bonds for the im-provements. Our railroad capital is already too much represented by bonds, and too little by stock to be in the best out of the surtoo much represented by bonds, and too little by stock, to be in the best and freest financia condition. The success of the Louisville and Nashville may lead other roads towards restor-

GENERAL NEWS FROM THE CAPITAL

WASHINGTON, February 27 .- [Special.]-The Alabama members are very much interested right now in the gubernatorial campaign in that state. SENATOR CALL SPEAKS. Senator Call is not at all disturbed by the resolution of censure little Billy Chandler has introduced. There is little doubt of Call having said in substance just what he printed in the Record, and a large portion of the senators who were present heard it, and will stand by the Floridan. In speaking of the matter to-

"It is not true, as alleged by Chandler, that I inserted in the Record any charges against him which I had not uttered in debate on the floor of the senate. What I said was heard by sen ators surrounding me, and they bear me out in the assertion that all I did afterwards was to make my meaning a little clearer in the printed

"My charge was that Chandler, by his course in the senate and elsewhere, in speaking about the race question, had by the violence of his utterances and otherwise, made himself responsible for outrages that had followed as the work of his party friends and followers in Florida. I have said repeatedly, and I say again, that the blood is on Chandler's hands, as the result of his teachings to the ignorant blacks of the south. He cannot escape the responsibility, try hard as he may, and the pretense that he did not hear what I said in the debate is an afterthought."

AN EXAMINATION PROPOSED. Colonel Oates, of Alabama, was today in-structed by the judiciary committee to ask the house to draft a resolution authorizing the judiciary committee to investigate the conduct of certain United States judges, district attorneys, marshals and commissioners in Georgia, Alabama, and other southern states, wherever crookedness is supposed to exist.

The object is to send a special congressional investigating committee to the states to inquire into the crooked methods suppose to exist. Complaint has been made by the attorney general and other officials, of frivolous prose cutions and professional witnesses to obtain money from the government. A commissioner in Arkansas got $15,000 in fees last year. The commissioner of internal revenue fifteen hundred dollars there must be crooked ness. These practices are said to prevail largely in Georgia and Alabama, and when the commission goes down there is apt to be

SAM BANDALL'S HEALTH. It seems to be the determination of various newspaper writers to kill Sam Randall at least once a week. Today has been one of those days. The report became current early this morning that the great statesman was dying. Immediately many of his friends went to his house to inquire. Among them was Mr. Carlisle, and when he returned he put a stop to all the rumors by announcing that Mr. Randall appeared better than he had been in three months. It is true, Mr. Randall has been in a very critical condition for a long time, and may die at any moment. However. today he was sitting up, and attended to some correspondence.

The senate considered the bill to declare un lawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production. The Derk-Lantern Sessions. The senate seems to be trying to find out through an investigating committee how secret or executive session news got out. They all know that it is told by the senators themselves, yet they are examining doorkeepers, newspaper men and everyone else they can haul into the investigating committee room, but are getting absolutely nothing. They tried the experiment today of keeping every one from the senate wing of the capitol, save a few trusted employee. swe a few trusted employes. TALKING FOR HIS SEAT.

Pendleton, of West Virginia, Speaks in His Own Behalf.
WASHINGTON, February 27.—Immediately after the reading and approval of the journal, Mr. Rowell, of Illinois, called up the contested election case of Atkinson vs. Pendleton and the floor was acceded to the contestee, Pendleton. He said that he felt it his duty to speak in his own behalf, although he knew that he was addressing a jury which was prejudiced against him. He believed that he had carried the first district of West Virginia by means as fair, as honorable, as upright, as had ever been used in any election in the history of the coun used in any election in the history of the country. He reviewed the evidence in detail, controverting the statements made by supporters of the majority report, and, in conclusion, reiterated his declaration that he had been fairly and honestly elected.

Mr. Cooper, of Ohio, closed the debate with an argument in favor of the claim of the contestant. A vote was then taken on the minority resolution, declaring Pendleton entitled to a seat. It was defeated—yeas 142, nays 159; a strict party vote.

The vote then recurred on the majority resolution seating Mr. Atkinson. The democrats refrained from voting, their object being to have the contestant seated by less than a quorum, so that the question of the right of the speaker to count a quorum may be taken before the courts. The vote resulted—Yeas, 162; nays, nothing; the speaker counting a quorum. Mr. O'Ferrall raised the point of no quorum, but the speaker ignored him; and the newly-elected member appeared at the bar of the house and took the oath of office amid applause on the republican side.

THE BOOMERS ARE READY

GUTHRIE, I. At Orlando, eighteen miles north of Guthrie, on the Cherokee Strip line, boomers are now assembled in readiness for the work. Officers of the Cherokee Strip Live Stock association are fearful that the boomers will compel them to vacate long before October 1st, the date set by the president's proclamation. The boomers threaten to burn the prairie grass and otherwise annoy the cattlemen to compel them to vacate next June, when their lease expires.

ATTRIBUTED TO THE ALLIANCE.

mall Dealers in Kansas Explain Their Fail-ST. JOSEPH, Mo., February 27 .- During the last week there has been an unusually large number of failures of small grocery firms and general dealers in Kansas; in fact the failures have been so numerous as to attract the attention of the jobbing trade, and an examination has been made into the cause of the seeming has been made into the work was placed in the hands of a mercantile agency, and it was found that the Farmers' Alliance was at the bottom of the trouble. The alliance has adopted the co-operative store plan, and their trade, together with that of such outside custom as they can influence, is thrown to the alliance stores. The result of the establishment of the alliance stores has been painfully felt by the regular retail traders. As a consequence many small dealers have been forced to the wall and compelled to make assignments. The alliance is stronger than the grange movements a few years ago, but the commercial agencies predict that the alliance stores will last just about as long, and no longer than the co-operative stores established by the grange. However, it cannot be denied that small failures have been of frequent occurrence lately, and it is also admitted that the direct cause of these failures, at least nine-tenths of them, have been due to the withdrawal of the farmers' trade and its they can influence, is thrown to the alliance the withdrawal of the farmers' trade and its transfer to the alliance stores.

CHARLESTON, S. C., February 27.—[Special.]
A special received here from Varnville, Hampton county, tonight, states that Bob Pope and his eleven-year-old son were killed in that county on Monday night by parties in ambush. The two were on their way home from Cummins's mill when they were killed. When the bodies were discovered it was found that Bob Pope's arroat had been cut from ear to ear after he had been shot. The special does not say whether the Popes are whites or blacks, but says they were obnoxious citizens, and it is supposed their slayers were white men. These are all the details available now.

Will Investigate Court Methods.

Washington, February 27.—The house committee on judiciary has become convinced that irregular practices prevail to a considerable extent in the circuit courts of the country, and particularly in southern courts. Attorney General Miller addressed the committee a letter on the subject, and as a result, Mr. Oates, of Alabama, was this morning instructed by the committee to report to the house a resolution providing for the investigation of the charges. Mr. Oates says that it may be necessary to send a committee to Alabama and other southern states to secure evidence.

The Democrats Have Secured Harmony of Action

BUT REPUBLICANS MAY BE ACTIVE And a Birmingham Man May Be

Their Candidate.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., February 27 .- [Spe cial:]—Alabama is now on the threshold of one of the greatest political battles since the war, and while the result is certain democratic victory, there may be contingencies which will cause the democratic leaders to put in hard licks to keep the state in proper column.

THE DEMOCRATIC FIGHT. The fight for the democratic nomination for overnor has passed through the warm stages, and now begins to splutter with heat. It may be safely said that many shady "critters" are tied out, waiting their chances on the homestretch, in case of a dead-lock.

For a time there was some uneasiness felt on the subject of a bolter, but this is now past, and the democratic party feels sure that the voice of the convention will be the final arbiter with all democratic aspirants.

THE REPUBLICAN SITUATION. What will the republicans do?

There's the rub! The executive committee met here Tuesday and fixed the convention of the party one week later than the time set for the democratic convention. They want to see whatt heir opponents will do before making a showing. The members of the committee were, as a rule, close mouthed, and several refused to talk about plans. One, prominent in the party councils, evaded your correspondent's pointed inquiries by saying: "I don't know whether we will put a ticket in the field or not. I don't think there is any use doing it." "Then you admit," said the correspondent, 'that you are outnumbered by the democrats of Alabama, and that a fight would be hope-

"I admit nothing of the sort. I regard Alabama as a clear republican state on a fair deal and honest count, but we won't get either, so there is no use wasting time and money on a campaign this year. I am opposed to nominating a ticket.

ANOTHER VIEW. Another republican of equal high standing, looked wise when questioned, and in reply, said: "We will surprise you democrats. We will run a ticket, and if you don't look sharp, it will be a winner. Our candidate for governor will come from Birmingham, and he ranks as one of the richest, if not the very richest, men of that city. I am not prepared to turn his name loose, but he is well known and highly respected in all sections of the state, and I have assurances that he has consented to make the race for all that it is worth."

THE WHITE LEAGUERS. The white league movement of last year is cutting some figure among the republicans, and it is generally understood that a spirited battle will be fought in the convention on this issue, but the white leaguers are confident of success, and claim that they will control the body, but in event that they are defeated there, it is probable they will withdraw and run a boat of their own.

SEEMS TO BE OUT OF FUNDS. A Gentlemanly-Looking Man Beating a Nash-

NASHVILLE, Tenn., February 27 .- [Special.] E. D. Myers was brought before the city court on the charge of loitering about the streets and trying to maintain himself by undue means. The testimony was to the effect that Myers registered at the Maxwell house on the 21st instant, and has been eating meals at that house and that he had no baggage.

THE YOUNG CHRISTIANS WOULD HELP HIM. He was told that he must pay in advance He did not pay anything for the meals he had already had, but said that if he could go to the Young Men's Christian association building he could have the matter fixed up. Officers Flynn and Polk, who had been called in, went to the Young Men's Christian association building, where he failed to arrange matters. He was taken to the police station, and was fined $5 by Judge Bell, with the reservation that if he showed everything to be all right, and cleared himself, the fine would be remitted. Myers claimed that he had no intention of defrauding the Maxwell house, and he went there know-ing that he would get money, and he still intended to pay.

HIS FRIEND WAS ABSENT. He said that the reason he did not get the matter fixed at the Young Men's Christian association rooms was that Secretary Thomas, to whom he had brought a letter when he came from Memphis, was not in the city. Myers in Memphis, it is said, helped to organize a theatrical company, which some young ladies of that city were induced to join. The company was to have gone on the road, but an article was written about it in the Commercial, and Myers seems to have given up the enterprise Myers is a quiet, gentlemanly fellow, and ap-parently well educated and insists that ha is entirely innocent.

CUTTING OFF THE WINE SUPPLY The Virginia Legislature After the Public

RICHMOND, Va., February 27.—[Special.]— By the appointment of a committee to inquire into the management of the fourteen educational and elemosynary institutions of the state of Virginia, the senate has directed an indirect investigation that it has been fre-an indirect investigation that it has been frequently intimated may result in some spicy, if not, indeed, sensational, developments.

No subject has led to such animated discussion this session as this one of the administration of the affairs of these institutions, and, while the debates have been very guarded, there have been many innuendoes and insinuations of gross misfeasance, if not corruption. As a result, official circles are very much stired up, over the matter. very much stirred up over the matter, and some of the managers are feeling altogether uncomfortable. INTIMATIONS THROWN OUT.

When the bill to adopt the check system of paying for supplies at the institutions was being discussed, it was strongly intimated that many things have gone wrong. It was stated that the partial itemized statements of expen-ditures sent in a few days ago, in response to a lemand of the senate, revealed the startling fact that at one institution, a member of the board of visitors, entitled to no salary, was shown to have been paid thirty dollars.

Today Mr. Heaton, of Loudon, favoring the abolition of boards of visitors and directors, and substituting a paid board to supervise all the institutions, declared the visitors to be very expensive and unable to accomplish much, ol learn much,in their quarterly visits of one dar

At another over $1,000 to buy whisky. In some cases there were charges for oigars. He did not know whether the visitors used the cigars or the lunatics, but he supposed the former It seemed to him that the action of the general assembly had been defied. In the case of the Petersburg school for colored girls, no senator on the floor could understand the accounts returned. It seemed to him that these mysterious reports might be made intentionally, and that they indicated that there was omething lagging behind.

A PAID BOARD SHOULD BE APPOINTED. He thought that a paid board of managers, to consist of three, should go to the institutions and see that there was no misappropriation of the funds. Let these reports be made directly to the governor, by whom they should be appointed. These itemized accounts were gotten to be printed, but they will not be printed now, and every one is asking why. The Terrible Tragedy Witnessed by a Railroad Engineer. CHARLOTTE, N. C., February 27.- [Special.] A most horrible casualty occurred near Hickory last night, in which Charles Sherrell, well-known citizen of Caldwell county, was killed.

The scene of the terrible accident was on a trestle on the Western North Carolina railcoad, about one mile west of Hickory. . As the train dashed around a curve and on the trestle, the headlight flashed upon a dark object on the track, about the middle of the trestle, that the first glance of Engineer Long made out to be an obstruction laid on the track to cause a wreck, but which on a second glance between the crossties and sleepers, hitched to a vehicle in which was reclining the form of

THROWN INTO THE RIVER Before the engineer's mind had taken in the meaning of them, the crash came, and the train plowed through the obstruction, and was across the trestle before there was time to reverse and down brakes. The train went through all without a break or an accident. The cow catcher lifted the road cart and hurled the body of the man against the front part of the engine, his body dropping down to the bottom of the creek, and his hat catching upon the flag staff and hanging there. The road cart was torn all up, one wheel falling on one side and the other on the other. The horse was literally mangled. As soon as the train could be stopped all hands went to the assistance of the unfortunate man, and the

He was recognized as Charles Sherrill, about thirty-five years old, who lived on the Cedar Valley and Hickory road, in Caldwell county, about five miles from the scene of the accident. The horse had becam rightened, and running away had fallen on the trestle, and Sherrill being hurt, could no get out of the way, although he heard the train approaching.

AND THE SWEEP OF THE WATERS Down the Valleys, Causing Death

ing of the Dam

PRESCOTT, Arizona, February 27.—Two pros-pectors, Moses and Robert Moore, who have arrived from Upper Walnut Grove dam, give the following particulars of the late disaster.

and Destruction.

"We came up to Haasaaympa prospecting, and passed a number of parties on the way who must inevitably have been lost Thursday. We arrived at the dam Friday morning. The water in the dam was rising at the rate of eighteen inches an hour with all sluices opened. Superintendent Thomas Brown had one hundred nen employed all day in blasting out a waste water way to aid the escape of the water Despite the immense volume which went through this passage the water continued to rise until 9 o'clock at night, when it began to pour over the top of the dam. In the afternoon Superintendent Brown seeing the dam must inevitably give way, sent a messenger to the lower dam to notify them of their danger, but he stopped at a station on the road, and be ing intoxicated failed to deliver the message The next morning another messenger was sent, but was overtaken and drowned by the flood just as he neared the lower camp.

THE MIDNIGHT ALARM. "About midnight we were warned by Mr. Brown calling to his foreman, "Get up Phil. I think the dam has broken." Soon after there was a tremendous roar which was indescribable, and we rose and saw the water rushing out of the dam. Inside of two hours it had disappeared entirely from where it was, from sixty to ninety feet deep. Francis M. Parker was one of the men rescued from a perilous position about daybreak. Parker and his partners had gone to bed. When he was awakened he heard one of his partners exclaim, "My God, what was that?" He (Parker) never saw them again. He was caught up by the water and was lifted to the roof of the cabin, where he clung to the rafters until the cabin, after floating around, was drawn against the bluff, where he seized some bushes and drew himself up on the cliff. One man was seen to start for a place of safety, and seeing escape was impossible, bravely turned his face to the flood and was swept away. Another man was seen going up a steen bill and het was the of the dam. Inside of two hours it had disap turned his face to the flood and was swell away. Another man was seen going up a steep hill, and had reached a point about fifty feet above the level of the river bank, when the mighty volume of water struck and killed him. LEVELLE'S FEARFUL CRIME.

Evidence Which Will Disprove His Claim of Insanity. CHARLESTON, S. C., February 27.-[Special.] Important evidence has been developed in the Levelle murder, which occurred on the 17th On that date Napoleon Levelle murdered his wife, and shot her uncle, Ben Feldmann, at whose house she had been living. There was but one witness at the inquest, Feldmann being too badly injured to speak.

THE STORY FELDMANN TELE
Today THE CONSTITUTION reporter was permitted to see him, his condition having some what improved. His statement rather upset one piec of insanity set up by the murderer. Feldmann says that after hearing the two pistol shots, he ran up to his door and found Levelle trying to push the stil breathing body of his wife in the stoop, and o shut the door so as to hide her body, just as McDow tried to hide the body of the late Captain Dawson after he had killed him. He said to him: "Why, Nap, what are you doing to poor Belle?" Upon which the murdere turned upon him and shot him. WHAT A POLICEMAN SAID. Another important bit of evidence has comto light. The officer of the day at the police station will testify that when Levelle was brought into the station on the night of the murder, he was heard to say: no one will be able to about it." "Well, I've killed Feldmann anyway, and A LETTER FROM HIS DAUGHTER. The prisoner publishes a letter which he says he received from his twenty-two-year-old

THE EXCITED PEOPLE. The streets were thronged with armed men who moved about with silent tread and solemn looks of determination on their faces. Threats were made and the jail was well guarded by fifty men, who were there to watch and pre vent the sheriff from carrying the prisoner to Atlanta. As the clocks the hour of two this clocks morning the crowd upon the streets began to disperse, and at 2:30 the streets were deserted. With the dawn of day the people arose from their couches, many men having slept but little. As the sun rose higher into the heavens little groups of men could be seen standing about upon the street corners, all engaged in the discussion of the all-absorbing LOOKING FOR PROOF.

At 9 o'clock the coroner's jury again met and took up the investigation. Dr. A. R. Bell was sent to Athens to carry the knife found on Brown Washington's person, also a piece of his shirt sleeve, in order that the state chemist might analyze the spots upon them. At 12 o'clock the jury adjourned for dinner, taking a two hours' recess, meeting again at 2 o'clock. At 3 o'clock Dr. Bell returned from Athens, but without having accomplished the object of his visit, as he only had a few minutes to remain in the classic city. At 3 o'clock the prisoner was marched into the presence of the coroner's jury, and the foreman, Mr. W. A. Broughton, began to ask him

'Well, proceed," said Mr. Broughton. Brown then, in a faltering voice, began and told how he saw the child pass going to school; how ho left his plow and ran across the field to overtake her; how he tried to accomplish his villainous purpose; how he cut her throat with his dull pocket-knife; how the little one plead with him for her life, and how he left her and ran back and resumed his plowing as though he had done nothing.
"I'll tell you," said one of the jury, "it was the most trying ordeal a jury has ever passed through, to sit there and hear the culprit tell of this, the most damnable crime which has ever been committed in this state.'

Many of the jury drew their knives, as if to cut the negro's throat, and it was all the foreman could do to keep the men in their places. The news of his confession spread over the city, and county upon the wings of the wind, and men were seen hurrying, running to and fro, and excitement ran high. A large crowd gathered in the lobby of the court house, and swore loudly that Brown Washinging should never be brought from the court

Colonel Joel A. Billups ascended the stairs, addressed the crowd most eloquently, pleading for the law and asking that the law be allowed to take its course. Judge H. W. Baldwin also addressed the crowd, and was in-terrupted by loud cries of "let him go to jail, n be sent to jail. We will stand back." The crowd made way for the sheriff's posse who marched the prisoner to jail, and the crowd quietly disper

It was agreed that the chairman should appoint ten men and enter the jail and bring out the prisoner, while the crowd should march in squads to a piece of woods about a mile from this city, with the prisoner leading the procession. The meeting dispersed, and the men proceeded to the jail. Sheriff Hilsman had done all in his power to protect the prisoner, having telegraphed Governor Gordon for assistance. The governor ordere the sheriff to order out the Madison Home Guards, but notione of the officers of the com-pany could be found. The crowd had procured keys and entered the jail without any trouble At the turning of the keys the great doors swung open, and the ten men entered. The miserable, shrinking culprit was dragged forth, pleading piteously for his life. The crowd marched hurriedly to the skirt of woods about a mile from the public square with the negro in front, between ten strong When near the center of the skirt of woods the crowd began yelling "Swing him "Swing him up!" Jacksonville, Fla., February 27.—Robert Armstrong, the negro who murdered Policeman Lowell last night, for compelling him to pick up a banana skin the negro had thrown on a store floor, was captured today in a swamp on the outskirts of the city. He confessed his crime, but asserted that he killed the officer in self-defense. He is from Camden county, Ga., but has worked in the Duvalhotel here for two months. He is securely lodged in the jail. There has been some talk on the streets of lynching, but it is not feared, as it is thought to be too clear a case of murder for him to escape the gallows when his trial comes off.

RAGING LIKE SEAS.

THE RIVERS CLIMBING' OUT OF

Washouts on Several Railroads-Great Danger of Overflows at Chattanooga and Nashville.

CHATTANOOGA, February 27 .- [Special.]-The Tennessee river marked, at 5 p. m., thirty on the gauge, a rise of eighteen feet in twenty four hours. It is still going up at the rate of five inches an hour, and will be at the danger line by midnight. In the last three days almost six inches of rain has fallen, and it is still coming down heavily with no prospect of stopping. Communication with Birmingham, Ala., is already cut off, as the track is under water on the Alabama Great Southern rail road. Eight feet more rise at Bridgeport, Ala. on the Nashville, Chattaneoga and S railroad, will stop traffic on that line. During the flood of 1886, the highest mark reached here was fifty-one feet, but it is not thought it will go so high this time. All the streams and tributaries above are bank full and threatening a higher stage.

At Other Points The Ohio river at Louisville, Ky., has reached the flood stage. One of the elevated road's stations on the city front has been cut off. A scare was started tonight, and a number of families in the district submerged in 1883 moved out, but there is little fear of such realized as them. The river is still rising 1883 moved out, but there is little fear of such a neluge as then. The river is still rising about an inch an hour. The Ohio and Mississippi railroad, between here and Cincinnati, is closed. C. C. A. Wooster, who has just returned from Middleborough, says the Cumberland is higher shan it has ever been, and the runaway waters have created havoc all along. There have been landslides, where great trees and immense bodies of earth have tumbled away, and in places big tracts of country are submerged.

Along the Yazoo, from below Greenville, it is stated that the levees will stand against three feet of additional rise, and it is probable their strength will be tested before the present flood passes there. The worst is feared for the newly constructed levees along the Tensas basin, especially those near and above Lake Providence and across the foot hills of Chicot county, Arkansas, all of which have been recently built.

Major Sterling, engineer for the lower Mississippi levee district, anticipates that the levees in Arkansas will give way and relieve the pressure on the Mississippi side. In Mississippi, the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad is co-operating with the levee board and has concentrated men at convenient places and sent them to the scenes of danger at all hours. Major Sterling has instructed his assistants to increase their force, strengthen all weak places and prepare for more water. The outlook in the section through which the Ohio and Arkansas rivers pass is not encouraging. Both streams are ris-ing fast and people along their banks have taken advantage of the timely notice sent out by the signal service and moved their stock to places of safety.

THE STORM AT NASHVILLE.

A storm reported central about Nashville, Tenn., at this writing—11 o'clock—is causing grave apprehension. If the precipitation in the next twenty-four hours should be as great in the Ohio valley as it has been at Memphis and Nashville, from the storm approaching here from that direction, it will doubtless cause a third great flood. In that case the river would be at its maximum about Tuesday or Wednesday next week. The situation at this writing has a dangerous look.

THE FRESHET AT ROME.

The Rivers Rising Rapidly—Fears of an Overflow.

ROME, Ga., February 27 .- [Special.]-The heavy rains of the last two days augmented the rivers considerably. They are rising rapidly, and will come to the top of the banks. No serious fears are entertained that there will be an overflow unless it rains again tonight. One or two cautious merchants have moved goods to higher grounds. The swollen rivers are the all absorbing topic at present. Large rafts of drift-wood are floating down. A large force of hands are engaged to keep it from lodging against the piers of the bridges.

The Rain Fell in Torrents.

ALBANY, Ga., February 27.—[Special.]—A terrific cyclone and rainfall prevailed near Bluffton yesterday, commencing about 1:30 and lasting two hours. For two miles houses, fences and trees were blown down. On the Hastings plantation a shelter was destroyed and a fine horse killed. Creeks that were dry rainfall was the heaviest ever known in that vicinity.

From two o'clock until the crowd returned to the city people were carried back and forth free of charge on the Edgewood avenue elec-

As a rule the lots brought higher prices than those auctioned off last spring, and in some instances the advance was quite large. Several lots, however, were knocked down at lower figures thau their immediate neighbors last year.

The first lot put up was a beauty—one of the finest in the park. It is on Elizabeth street near the beautiful residence of Mr. Joel Hurt and Mr. Josiah Carter.

At noon yesterday he was sinking, and his fond parents sat by his bed-side watching the ebb tide of life as it gently, yet surely, bore the soul from the shores of time to the land beyond the river. He called to his mother and said:

"Mother, how long have I to live?"

"I don't know, my son, but a long, long time, I hope."

"Mother, take my hand; I love you, oh, so dearly."

A slight pause, and then he said:
"Now let me sleep."
The mother saw that his eyelids were drooping, and while she held his hand his gentle spirit took its flight. He died fully conscious that he was going, and up to the very last he seemed glad that he could die thus, camly and in possession of all his faculties. He disposed of various liftle mementoes to his brothers and friends, and commended his young wife and babe to the care of his parents before he grew too weak to talk, and his death was as peaceful as the sleep of a child.

Mr. "Billy" Florence's appearance as Sir Lucius O'Trigger was a treat which few present had ever enjoyed. It is a character which he has not assumed for many years, but one to which his methods seem peculiarly suited. That Mr. Florence is one of the most popular actors on the American stage, his hearty reeption last night would serve to indicate. It is not extravagant praise to say that no other impersonation of the famous Mrs. Malaprop has equaled that of Mrs. John Drew The character has added many a happy laugh to the world's supply, and nobody has so well brought out the "harmless self-sufficiency of ignorance with such an air of decorous authority," as one critic puts it, as Mrs. John Drew. The language is weak in adjectives capable of expressing the exquisite art of this

The Sir Anthony Alsolute of Mr. Edwin Varrey was a highly commendable performance. Stars and company were given a rousing re-ception. Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Florence, Mrs. Drew, Mr. Paulding each were greeted by hearty appearance upon their appearance. Of course this is especially true of Mr. Jefferson nd Mr. Florence.

Society was out in force, and the udience was a most brilliant one. The Lenten season doubtless kept away many who would otherwise have been present, but there were many to take their places. The presence of the members of the local Temple of the Mystic Shrine, who had come to greet Mr. Florence, added much to the brilliancy of the

And Builds Up an Answer Which Seems to

Be Satisfactory to Himself if Not to Colonel Candler. ATHENS, Ga. February 27.- [Special.]-The article in today's Constitution, from Wash ngton, was read with surprise by many, when they were apprised of the controversy between Colonel Candler and Editor Gantt. Gantt's article. Tomorrow's Banner will contain the following editorial in regard to the matter:

The Constitution of yesterday contained a interview with Hon, Allen D. Candler by in Washington correspondent, in which that gentleman is reported to take exceptions to our statement that he could not secure the nomination for governor on account of his position on the internal revenue laws. The gentleman is in error when he thinks we doubt his democracy, for such an idea mever passed our mind. It was simply his position on this one vital issue that we quistioned, and we repeat our query and as a plain answer from Colonel Candler. Are you not an advocate of abolishing ereducing the government tax on distilled spirit, and have you not so declared yourself and will not a removal of this tax necessitate a proportionate tariff on the necessaries of the life we have mistaken the gentleman, we will take great pleasure in correcting our error. Colonel Candler's name was being passed around among the state papers as a suitable candidate for governor, and we believe his home papers gave the nomination great prominence, the certainly read this notice. As neither himself or friends saw fit to correct them, we contend that we were at perfect liberty to express our opinion of his claims. No one knows better than Colonel Candler that when he made the race for congress against Mr. Speer that the question of internal revenue taxes and tariff reduction were neither considered or discussed, the entire campaign hanging on the political record of Emory Speer. We will state for Colonel Candler's edification that we have no special conditions of the state of the state proportion of the state in the condition of the state of the state in the condition of the state of the state in the endeavoring to evade the only and vital issue in our editorial by a pyrotechnic display of his democracy. If we had any doubt on this subject, the Banner editor would never have supported the gentleman eight years ago. We simply stated that Colonel Candler f

Colonel Candler also takes occasion to explain his position on the silver question, which no one but himself drags into this discussion. There is but one issue between Congressman Candler and the Banner editor. Are you in favor of a repeal or reduction of the liquor lax? If not, we are due you an apology, for you have been grossly misrepresented by the protective tariff organs. If you are, your resolution uot to offer as a candidate for governor before the tariff reform democrats of Georgia is a wise precaution against defeat. Toe the mark, colonel, and don't switch off on a side track. Colonel Candler's interview reminds us of the country lawyer who was employed to defend a fellow for sheep stealing, and put in as a plea that his client never rode a mule in his life.

DEATH OF COLONEL SMYTHE,

One of the Veteran Editors of the Olden Time.

Augusta, Ga., February 27.—[Special.]—A notable figure in Georgia journalism passed away today, when Colonel James M. Smythe died at the home of his son in this city at the advanced age of eighty years. Colonel Smythe came to Augusta in the spring of 1846, and commenced work on the editorial columns of the Chronicle and Sentinel. Later he published and edited the Republican. In about three years he built up the Republican to four thousand subscribers and sold it out to Colonel James T. Gardner, editor of the Constitutionalist, and then became associate editor with Colonel Gardner on the Constitutionalist and Republic, where he remained for several years. He subsequently edited the Georgia Home Gazette, and was postmaster at Augusta before the war. He was a courtly gentleman and a fighting editor. He had two duels, and bore himself always with conspicuous gallantry. In later years he edited the Union and Recorder of Milledgeville, and more recently wrote letters for that paper from Augusta. He was a force-ful scholarly writer. Of late years he was Time. Milledgeville, and more recently wrote letters for that paper from Augusta. He was a forceful, scholarly writer. Of late years he was quite poor, but adversity never made him less of the Chesterfield or detracted from his courtly dignity. He leaves three children—a son, Mr. W. W. Smythe, and two daughters, Mrs. Whitfield Russell, of this city, and Mrs. C. P. Wilcox, wife of Professor Wilcox, of the university. His funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon.

A JUMP IN STOCKS.

GEORGIA IMPROVEMENT ON THE UP GRADE.

The Recent Arrangement With the Georgia uthern and Florida Causes the Rise -President Maddox Talks.

The good effects of the traffic connection of the Atlanta and Florida road with the Georgia othern and Florida, announced in THE Constitution a day or two ago, are already being manifested.

As has already been said, the admirable manner in which Colonel Maddox has con-ducted the road, and especially the securing of this connection, means a great deal to the commercial interests of Atlanta. But it means very much more to the owners of stock in the Georgia Improvement com-

And in putting money in their pockets the Atlanta and Florida puts money—a considera-ble sum, too—in Atlanta's pocket, for Atlanta men built the road and almost all of the stock is held here. Since the announcement of the auspicious ontcome of the negotiations between Colonel Maddox and Colonel Sparks, there has been a great jump in Georgia Improvement stock.

A week ago any amount of it could have been bought at fifty cents on the dollar, and this, there were few or no buyers at all. Yesterday Atlanta and Florida stock was not to be had. Several instances are quoted where holders declined to put their stock on much at a considerably lower figure. Even at he market at par.

Most of those who had money in Georgia Improvement were unwilling to put any price upon it at all, but were elated and confident over the decidedly bright outlook for the A. and F.
They had held on through the many trials and tribulations of the little road, and now that the sun seems to be on the ascent they were loth to part company with it. Their nerve and pluck may yet yield them a bountecons return.

Colonel Maddox says there was a period in the road's existence—at that period when its existence was a matter of great anxiety among the stockholders—when stock could not have been sold at ten cents on the dollar.

It is doubtful if a share could be had for less than par now.

than par now.

The reason for this is not alone in the recent

The reason for this is not alone in the recent combination, however. Aside from this the books of the company show that the road is already paying. A conservative estimate, taken from the business of the last four months, puts the net earnings at eighty thousand dollars per year, with the present facilities.

Fifty thousand dollars per annum is the interest on the road's bonded indebtedness, which bonded indebtedness covers everything and leaves two hundred thonsand dollars for terminal facilities. Even on this basis, the stockholders would realize their original investment in four years. With the double earnings assured by the combination with the Georgia Southern and Florida, the handsome profit there is in the road can readily be seen. Georgía Southern and Florida, the handsome profit there is in the road can readily be seen. All this accounts for the boom in Georgía Improvement company stock. Those who hold it and are acquainted with the facts, realize that they have a good thing. The average American never gets too much of a good thing, hence there is very little Atlanta and Florida stock going a-begging.

"I have a good block of Georgia Improvement stock," said Colonel L. J. Hill, president of the Gate City bank.

of the Gate City bank.
"What do you hold it at?"

"I won't sell at all; I don't hold it at any

"Nort even at par?"
"No; I'm satisfied with what I have, and really don't care to part with it."
This was asked Colonel Hill by a reporter over the telephone. Not that the said reporter could buy a share or so at even the very lowest depths to which it had ever fallen, but simply to find out just what the stockholders thought of their investment.

of their investment.

To Mr. F. E. Block was put the same ques-

To Mr. F. E. Block was put the same question by the same means.

"No; my stock is not for sale at any price." It was gently hinted that Colonel Block thought he had a bonanza.

"It's just this," concluded Mr. Block, "whatever Georgia Improvement is worth today, it will be worth at least double that figure in two years. So I'll hold on to mine."

"No, sir, I don't believe I care to sell. It suits me, and I guess I'll just hold on to it awhile longer."

This was the way Mr. Carroll Payne put it. He has a block of Georgia Improvement stock, and evidently meant what he said:

"What will buy your Georgia Improvement stock. Is it on the market?"

This was put to Mr. Joseph Moody.

This was put to Mr. Joseph Moody.

'It is not for sale," said Mr. Moody. "Just now I wouldn't take one fifty for it. There's more come out in that little road than you more come out in that little road than you have any idea of."

"Narrowed down, the facts are these. Since the recent consolidation, or rather traffic agreement, the old confidence which built the road has returned to the stockholders again. road has returned to the stockholders again.

They see the great enterprise and importance of the road, and are in high hopes of realizing the ends arrived at when the road was inaugurated. Hence they are perfectly willing to abide by their first judgment, and do not care to give up their interest in the future of the Atlanta and Florida. Several gentlemen have applied to Colonel Maddox recently to buy stock, which shows the confidence of those not directly interested in the road.

There are some who are slow to believe that the stock is really greatly increased in value. To those Colonel Maddox has a few words to

"Why is Atlanta and Florida and Georgia

"Why is Atlanta and Florida and Georgia Improvement company stock worth more now than before the combination with the Georgia Southern and Florida?" President Maddox was asked yesterday.

There has been considerable talk about the stock in the past day or so, and those directly interested, especially, will be glad to know upon just what grounds the claim of advanced value is made.

ration just what grounds the claim of advanced value is made.

"That is a very simple question," said Colonel Maddox, "and the answer is equally plain to a business man. The bonded debt of the Atlanta and Florida railroad, which covers all the in lebtedness of the road, and leaves $200,000 for terminal purposes, is $840,000. This amount together with $400,000 subscribed and paid in by the Georgia Improvement company, together with $75,000 that was subscribed and paid in, or the subscription to the common stock of the Atlanta and Florida railroad when it was commenced and under construction, covers all that has been spent for building this road.

"Not counting anything but our bonded"

"Not counting anything but our bonded indebtedness, our interest account is $50,000 per annum. Now under the present management, we can safely count on $80,000 indebtedness, our interest account is $50,000 per annum. Now under the present management, we can safely count on $80,000 per annum before this combination was made.

"We now have assurance from the manager of the Georgia Southern and Florida railroad that they will be able to turn over to our road about thirty carloads of freight per day at Culloden, which will be largely lumber and Ireight of that class, going north.

"Taking this item alone, making it the basis of calculation, I think a conservative estimate of the increased business will be $80,000 additional. From my talk with men who thoroughly understand the business, and others who are well posted, I am satisfied that that figure is lower really than necessary.

"This will make the net earnings of our road $100,000.00. Take from this $50,000.00, the interest on the bonds, and we have $110,000.00 annually to go to the stockholders of the Atlanta and Florida railroad."

"Where does the Georgia Improvement com-

They own all the Atlanta and Florida railroad stock, except $75,000 above alluded to, which 'was subscribed and paid when the road was under construction. Even suppose that the receipts of the road did not increase, stockholders of the Georgia Improvement company, in four years, will get every dollar they have paid in on the stock.

"That is why the stock of the Georgia Improvement company is so valuable now."

provement company is so valuable now. I want to explain the matter fully, so that many of the stockholders who have been sweating over their load will not sell it for less than its prospective value."

"What is the stock worth?"

"I prefer to give the facts and the figures and let the stockholders judge for themselves as to the value. Of course, this increased business will necessitate the purchase of more rolling stock, but I expect even better results than even those figures named.

"The bonds are a good investment, then?"
"Unquestionably."

"Unquestionably."
"Unquestionably."
"Will there be any offered here?"
"I would like to see some of them placed here, though it would be of no advantage to me or the road."
"But still, for the benefit of the people, I would like to see some of them placed here, as would like to see some of them placed here, as it will pay better than anything in this country that I know of in the way of bonds, at the price they can be bonght at."

BRICK CLAY IN BROOKS.

Country. QUITMAN, Ga., February 27 .- [Special.]-Almost due south of Quitman, just six miles from the railroad, lies a bed of the very finest fire-brick clay. There is an outcrop of twentyfive or thirty acres of it, and it is on the plantation of Mrs. Fanny A. Arrington, a wealthy and highly respected widow of this county.

and highly respected widow of this county.

On and near the surface it is of a blueish color, but the deeper any one digs the whiter the clay becomes. For the past thirty years the neighbors have used it in building chimneys, and those earliest built are in first-class condition now and still doing service. Even sun-dried brick made of this clay make better building material than the average merchantable brick. Brick made of it have been subjected to the white heat of a forge, and have come out of it perfectly white and unharmed by the test. The Quitman cotton factory have used them in their furnace with a satisfaction yielded by no other brick.

Mr. Arrington is in easy circumstances, and has had no occasion to call attention to the superior merits of this clay. superior merits of this clay.

Cutting Into South Alabama. EUFAULA, Ala., February 27.-[Special.]-There was a meeting of the citizens to organize a construction company known as the "Eufaula Terminal company," their immediate object being to build a road from here to some point on the Alabama Midland, near or at Dothen. A subscription was commenced and $27,800 was raised in a few minutes, and it is thought the other will be raised at once. They want $250,000, but when $200,000 is subscribed they will commence work. The road will eventually be built north to a point to intersect with the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia, or the Louisville and Nashville, thereby giving us a northern outlet, and rates with which we can compete with other points.

"Cromwell and His Times." "Cromwell and His Times."

This is the subject of the forthcoming lecture of Rev. W. J. Scott, at the First Methodist church, Tuesday evening, March 4. No better theme could have been selv ted from English history for vivid and impressive description. Whether leading a prayermeeting at Huntingdon or declaiming with orthodox whims on the wickedness of flounces and furbelows in the long parliament; whether hurling his ironsides against the cavaliers at Marston Moor or uplifting the hundred and seventeenth psalm at the foot of Doorhill to the tune of Bangor, he is at all times a splendid subject for historical study.

Dr. Scott is one of the most popular and distinguished lecturers in the south, and his eloquent and scholarly story of Cromwell and his times will be sure to draw a large and cultured audience.

NEWS OF SOCIETY.

THE RECEPTION GIVEN BY

Events and News About People-Society Personals.

The residence of Mrs. Albert Cox, on Houston street, presented a scene of unusual brilliance yesterday, elaborately decorated, and filled with beautiful women, to meet Mrs. Cox's charming guest, Mrs. Swann, of New York. The reception guest, Mrs. Swann, of New York. The reception room to the right was draped in yellow silk, with decorations of yellow jessamine and Marechail Neil roses. Under a chandelier entwined with smilax and jessamine, Mrs. Cox, in an exquisite gown of crimson velvet, over a skirt of cream brocade, received her guests with that charming grace for which she is so widely known. On her right stood Mrs. Swann in an exquisite worth costume of vieux rose. The front, of white illusion, was held on either side by panels richly embroidered in multi-colored beads, giving a most artistic effect. The princesse overdress of heavy brocade gave glimpses of pale canary satin, and the corsage of costly lace was held on either side by the trimming of beads, ending with a jewelled girdle of exquisite design. The gown was unusually becoming to Mrs. Swann's stately beauty, and the effect of the vieux rose against the and the effect of the vieux rose against the rich hangings of gold, was most artistic. The li-brary to the left was most handsomely deorated in lillies, great jars of these pure white flowers were fillies, great jars of these pure white flowers were scattered about the room and seeming peculiarly handsome with the character of the room, whose walls are adorned with portraits of Georgia's statesman. Passing into the little room where where was served tea, one wondered if she had not by mistake stumbled into a Japanese pagoda, so completely were the decorations of this character. Suspended from the ceiling was a huge umbrella, to whose handle was tied a gaily colored lantern. Japanese cartains covered the windows. lantern. Japanese cartains covered the windows, in front of which was the pretty little table whose entire service and appointments were of Japanese, even to the tea-cosy of split bamboo. The mantel was banked in palm and japonica, and from the walls were banners and other ornaments, everything in Japanese. Across the ball was the sup-per room, whose decorations were entirely in pink. The large center table was beautifully decorated in the pervading tone. The center vase of royal Worcester was filled with la France vase of royal Worcester was filled with la France roses, surrounded with candelabra whose tapers were of the same hue. At one end of the table was a basket of frisia and pink hyacinths entwined with maiden hair fern, at the other a vase of roses. Near by a delicate silver epergne was filled with white grapes, while not far away was a rose old china fruit dish of assorted fruits. Dainty pink wafers of conserves were scattered about, and crystal classes of pink hom-hom. Suspended from tal glasses of pink bon-bons. Suspended from the chandalier which was trimmed in smilax hung a huge ball of delicate pink peoniss and scattered all over the table were loose La France roses. The sideboard was superbly trimmedin ferns, hyacinths and roses, having for its centerpiece a huge pink vase of white lilies. This made a beautiful background for the handsome table, whose service of rare old china gave an added charm. The punch bowl was in the adjoining hall, while the musi-cians were stationed in the hall above. The ladies who assisted Mrs. Cox and Mrs. Swanwere Mrs. Dr. Orme, Mrs. Albert Thornton, Mrs. Henry Porter, Mrs. Dr. Baird, Mrs. Black, Mrs. Burton Smith, Mrs. Cooledge, Mrs. Cabaniss, Mrs. W. B. Lowe, Misses Marsh, Sally Brown, Hammond, Lily Orme, Fowler, Annie May Hall, and Eula Ketner. All Atlanta society was there, and it was one of the most brilliant affairs of the season.

The elegant lunch given by Mrs. Sam Small, at her home, on Capitol avenue, yesterday afternoon was the event of the week. It was given in honor of Mrs. John Danner, of Canton, Ohio.

The long table was decorated with beautiful cutglass and a profusion of rare and beautiful flowers Those present were: Mrs. John Danner, Mrs. J. N. It was curious to note the interest shown in the capture of that guinea. Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brockway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myse about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seems I to do any permanent good until I sgan the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggist.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his foot. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. THE ACTOR TO GIVE HIS SHARE OF THE AUCTION TO CHARITY.

He Says He Had No Intimation that the Tickets Were to Be Auctioned Off-Mr. DeGive Follows Suit.

That auction of tickets! To those 'ho paid premiums at the opera house a few days ago for tickets last night, it may be some comfort to know that the pre-mium money goes, after all, as a donation to three worthy charitable institutions of Atlanta. Saved from the speculators; extorted from theater-goers; given to charity!

MR. JEFFERSON TALKS. "I knew nothing about the auction of tickets," Mr. Jefferson stated last night to a Constitution reporter. "Nor did Mr. Florence know anything of it. Of course we have no desire to keep the money. As long as it is in our hands, though, and distributing it again amongst those that paid it is out of the question, I know no better way than to give it to charity here in Atlanta. After consultation I have decided to divide my share of this money equally between the Grady Hospital and the Woman's Industrial

"I wish it distinctly understood that I had no knowledge that the seats were to be auctioned off. The first I knew of this was from reading the account in the paper after the tickets had been sold."

AND MR. DEGIVE.

Mr. DeGive has decided to give his share of the premium money to St. Joseph's infirmary.

The auction, he says, was solely for the protection of the public against speculators, and that he had no selfish motive in the transac-

AS TO THE AMOUNT. A sworn statement is to be made of the amount taken in, and the money divided by this affidavit.

Mr. DeGive states that the whole amount collected as premiums is, approximately, $400.
Of this amount Mr. Jefferson receives 85 per cent, or $340.
Mr. DeGive is entitled to 15 per cent, or $60.

So the Grady hospital is given $170.

The Woman's Industrial home, $170.

St. Joseph's infirmary, $60.

Which disposes, in perhaps as satisfactory a way as it could be done, of the auction fund.

"McCarty's Mishaps." "McCarty's Mishaps."

Tonight the walls of the opera house will no doubt ring with the many laughs of quite a throng of laughter lovers, gathered in honor of the advent of the Ferguson and Mack comedians, who will tickle the risibles of their auditors with a production of their spasmodic creation, "McCarty'c Mishaps."

It is a farce of the most pronounced order, and simply-revels in an untold quantity of fun and laughter.

It sustains its only claim to public attention by whiling away two and one-half hours with the dark side of every day life forgotten, and that time spent in worship at the shrine of the enviced god of comedy, "Momus."

Bonnie Kate Castleton. On Monday and Tuesday, at night and matinee, this bonnie-lassic will appear in her new play, "A Paper Doll," and crowded houses will welcome this favorite comedienne.

A SMALL BLAZE. Moses Adler's Junk Shop on Fire Again Last Night.

For the second time within a few days, the junk shop of Moses Adler, at No. 85 South Broad street, was found to be on fire last night. Patrolman Sheridan discovered the blaze about 8 o'clock, and sent in the alarm. The fire was located in a rear corner of the building, just as it was before, and was confined to a couple of bags of rage. It is supposed that a spark from the floor above caused the fire. There was no damage.

The Cutting of Mr. Cheek.

In justice to ourselves and to the stock men at our stables we would like the public to hear our side of the difficulty that was writen up through THE CONSTITUTION this morning between Mr. Cheek and Mack Wheat.

The Constitution this morning between Mr. Cheek and Mack Wheat.

There has been no hard feelings between the drivers and stockmen at our stable lately, in fact there never was but one fight before. Mack Wheat came in the stable and claimed his horse had not been watered and gave for his reason that he drank two-buckets full of water. Now any one who knows anything about horses knows that if you drive a horse even two or three blocks fast that they will drink a good deal of water, that was the case in tujis instance. Mack then commenced to curse Jim, who attends to his horses, and Jim told him theyfind been watered. Mr. Smith, a young boy in our employ, said he saw Jim water the horse. Mack said it was a lie, and Mr. Smith told his grown brother, who was going to strike Mack when he denied it, and Jones of our firm asked Mr. Smith not to have a difficulty in the stable as Mack denied cursing his brother. Mr. Smith then let the matter drop. Mr. Cheek had also said that he heard Mack cursing young Smith and Mack became very mad with him and told Jones, who was trying to get him out and stop the fuss that he would cut the neart out of the trying to get him out and stop the fuss that he would cut the neart out of the ferring to Cheek; if he, Cheek, repeated that he cursed young Smith.

Jones had got Mack up close to the office and was trying to silence him when Mr. Cheek walked

As Cheek walked up, he told Mack he only told the truth about it, and at that, before Jones could interfere, Mack called Cheek a name, and rushed in andcut him. Then Cheek struck him with the heavy end of a whip, rushed into the office and got a pistol, and followed Mack up the street, caught him and held him till an officer came. Then Cheek became so weak that he had to be carried home, where he is now daneerously hurt.

so weak that he had to be carried home, where ne is now dangerously hurt.

No one saw the cutting except Mr. Jones. Plenty of others heard him cursing, saw the knife as he ran out the door, and when he reached the street, he started back, knife opened in his hand remarking that he had cut Cheek's heart out. This was heard and seen by Mr. Hays and General F. M. Bamburg, of Bamburg, S. C., and also by several others who were sitting in front of the stable.

ATHENS, Ga., February 27.—[Special.]—Eli
Perkins has gotten himself in trouble in Athens, and has brought upon himself the roproach of many citizers. He is reported to have remarked that the white people here had no right to protest against the appointment of Mat Davis fo the postoffice, as he had as much claim to the office as any white man. He was bitter in condemning the whites for making an effort to wrench the office from Davis, and for such a speech has gotten himself into bad favor among the citizens here. Had his sentiments been known he would not have had an audience large enough to pay his board bill in Athens.

The Voyage of Life.

Life is beset by evils and changes on every side. From birth to manhood and from manhood until old age eternal vigilance is the price of health. There is one remedy that has saved many a rickety, headaching, blood poisoned, dyspeptic mortal to a life of usefulness and robust health. It is known as Dr. Bull's Sarsaparilla and it is a Sarsaparilla that is a Sarsaparilla. Not a thousand doses of molasses and water for a dollar, but a concentrated essence of the best virtues of sarsaparilla. lasses and water for a dollar, but a concentrated essence of the best virtues of sarsaparilla and other alterative herbs. It heals, it cures where other sarsaparilla and blood remedies have no more effect than so much stagnant water. If your system craves an alterative, if you value life you do yourself a great injustice if you fail to try this excellent remedy. Demand it of your druggist and take no other.—Bidney Times. GREAT DANGER.

They Should Be Avoided-A Few Points in Regard to Them.

When the Creator in His wrath (or for His glory?) saw fit to expel His first creation, His own image, from the garden of Eden, He placed on them the curse of disease and death. In after generations He visited His chosen people with many "plagues for their disobedience," but of all the many ills He inflicted upon his fallen creation none are more painful, more loathsome, or more errible in its regarder than fistula in ano; fearful in its rayages and dangerous to life, robbing one Regard to Them. none are more painful, more loathsome, or more errible in its effects than fistula in ano; fearful in its ravages and dangerous to life, robbing one of all the pleasures of living. But, as in all other afflictions, He has given a remedy; science in its primitive state was unable to utilize the remedy without eaussing most intense suffering, and oftentimes leaving the victim in a condition much worst than at first. It was left for the progressive physicians of the present age to offer you a pleasant cure for this most unpleasant disease. You need no longer fear the "knife," with all its pain and dangers, for it is unnecessary. I have laid aside all harsh means and treat you by a rational treatment that when properly applied for a sufficient time will cure you. Have you fistula? If so, it is unnecessary to ask you if you wish to be cured of it. But do you wish to avoid the intense pain of a severe operation, or are you wedded to the old belief that you cannot be cured without the crude and painful means formerly employed? If you are, I have nothing to offer you. If you are not, I offer you the very latest that science can give you. I have cured many by this rational method, and I offer the same to you confidently, promising you satisfactory results. Many ladies are afflicted with fistula. To all I say, do not let your timidity prevent you from availing yourself of this opportunity to obtain a cure. My arrangement for privacy are all you could wish. Promising to verify all my claims. Respectfully. Dr. R. G. Jackson.

Smokers smould bear in mind unstately that he fine Havana cigar is fit to smoke unless it is made by hand. Having an experience of twenty years in the business we can say the Spanish method of making cigars by hand is perfect; in fact, it is an art in the highest sense of the word. In making recently our annual purchase of the word. In making recently our annual purchase of Havana leaf tobacco, we took particular pains to seelect just such qualities of leaf suited especially for this market, namely: a thin silky leaf; rich in color, not too light or too dark; mild and sweet in taste, coupled with that brilliancy of fragrance which is an exclusive property of the very best Cuban leaf tobacco. There is nothing bitter Cuban leaf tobacco. There is nothing bitter about this genuine Vuelta Ahaja leaf; it has not the slighest touch of rankness, and mark well, it does not make you dry in the throat neither does it bite your tongue when you smoke it. Our cigars are for sale in all first-class drug stores, eigar stores, saloons and restaurants and the trade is supplied from the factory at No 2 Edgewood avenue, corner Peachtree street, by A. L. CUESTA.

ns to Agents, came at last, and sweet Eva could remain no longer.

It seems more than we can bare to give her up; but there is consolation in the knowledge of the fact that God doeth all things well for those that love him. Let us weep not, for the soul would not exchange the home that she has gained for ten thousands worlds like this; for she is free from all the troubles and trials with which we poor mortals have to contend.

True, the sweet musical tongue is here no longer to cheer the fond and loving husband, but let us realize the fact that she is among the angelic host around God's throne, and that her sweet tongue shall be engaged in singing his praises forever and ever. Let us not be sorry, we ought to be glad that God has selected her as one of his jewels; it ought to fill us with joy to know that she is to have an endless eternity and bask forever in the light of God's glory.

During her illness she said: "I am praying that I may recover, for I do not want to leave you all behind, but I say also Thy will, Oh! Father, not mine, be done, for Thou knowest best."

As she approached the final end and supreme moment, she remarked: "There is nothing dark about death; but Oh! how bright and how beautiful are those little children I see."

These were almost her last words; then the finger of death gently touched her eyelide, and she slept.

Watches and Diamonds Found in Tea and Coffee—A Novel Way of Introducing Goods.

The names of all persons finding diamonds, watches, etc., are added to the list daily. The Overland Tea company, of San Francisco, Cal., have refitted the store, No. 43 Peachtree street, and in order to introduce their goods, this company will put for sixty days souvenirs in every can of tea and coffee sold, such as solid gold, silver and nickel watches, also genuine diamonds in solid gold setting; also money and many other articles of less value. Every can contains a souvenir. The coffee, can and contents weigh about three pounds; tea, can and contents about one and one-half pounds. This expensive and novel way of advertising will be discontinued after sixty days, and these really choice goods will be sold strictly on their merits, out without the souvenir. Of course every purchaser must not expect to get a diamond or watch. This company client that

THE STOCK MARKET.

The Day on the Floor of the New York Stock Exchange.

NEW YORK, February 27.—The stock market was still more quiet today, and fluctuations in most of the list reflect the general apathy of operators, being confined to the smallest fractions, except a few stocks which are now objects of attention from bears and traders. The average operator, however, has come to the conclusion that there is nothing to be made by trading on either side of the account. General option is all the trading, ex-cept a little buying from time to time by insiders, when their favorites are pressed, and the selling eems to be of the same nature, so the outstanding short interest, in comparison with the dimension of the market, is unduly large. Foreigners have shown a disposition to buy of late, and prices beshown a disposition to buy of late, and prices before the opening of the board were materially higher than those of last evening and the opening hour, while responsive to a limited extent, to the advance in London, was only slightly higher and under pressure from the bears, this advantage was soon wiped out. A desperate attempt was made during the day to break New England, the opportunity being taken to offer it down when so one was trading in the stock.
A suspicious move made in the interest of the bucket shops was expressed and gained credence.
There was no bad news to make a decline, and although bankers are awaiting anxiously some action at Washington, which will make money more plentiful and easier and so have a bearing on the situation in Wall street of a favorable nature, there was no lack of funds, and rates were easy throughout the day.
Besides New England, the only weak point in the Besides New England, the only weak point in the regular list was Union Pacific, which was sold down by the traders. Sugar refineries was weak all the way out, however, the bears selling it down on a story that the courts would interfere with the nayment of the next dividend. Tennessee coal was ather weak again, notwithstanding the publication of a bull article upon the property in an influential norning paper. Grangers were less active, and morbing paper. Grangers were less active, and were traded in over a narrow range without exception. The market closed dull and heavy generally at the close to the lowest figures. Final changes are, in most cases, in the direction of lower proces, but the only ones of importance are losses of 1% in sugar and one per cent in Tennessiee Coal. Hubbard, Price & Co.'s Circular.

NEW YORK, February 27—[Special]—Spot sales in Liverpool today were 3,000 bales, and futures were quiet and steady at a decline of only 1-64d as compared with yesterday. This was generally considered as a fairly good showing in view of the large receipts and drooping market here yesterday, and resulted in an advance of some 3@4 points on the opening call. Some considerable buying orders in June and July contracts were executed at the advance, but the market proved a repetition of yesterday, and, under the influence of unexpectedly heavy receipts, again sold off, closing at the lowest of the day. Manchester is reported quiet. Yarns move slowly. Cloths, not much doing. Receipts tomorrow, it is expected will reach 20,000 baies, which will give us an aggregate for the week nearly equal to last year. The interior towns of Augusta, Memphis, St. Louis and Gincinnati received today respectively 130, 386, 790 and 905 baies, against 168, 1,300, 1,180 and 801 bales last year. These receipts are unexpretedly heavy, and have undoubtedly much damaged the enthusiasm of the bulls. The most noticeable pressure today has been upon the near positions, some 5,000 bales March contracts being sold in a block to escape tender, and a large number of notices being in circulation, and, contrary to expectation, no one appeared ready to stop them. Short notices were freely offered at 1@2 points discount. This is significant, in view of all the talk there has been of a possible March corner. Cotton continues to move this way, and unless the market shall dea possible march corner. Cotton continues to move this way, and unless the market shall de-cline we think the next month will witness a sub-stantial addition to the quantity in store here. Hubbard, Price & Co.

THE CHICAGO MARKET. Features of the Speculative Movement in Grain and Provisions.

Grain and Provisions.

CHICAGO, February 27—Wheat—There was a good business again today, and the feeling was stronger with prices again averaging higher than yesterday. The opening was \(\frac{1}{3} \) cower than yesterday, but soon a better feeling began to develop, and prices were advanced \(\frac{1}{3} \) c, then eased off \(\frac{3}{3} \) c, again ruled firmer and the closing was \(\frac{3}{3} \) and \(\frac{3}{3} \) could be given than yesterday. One of the given that higher than yesterday. One of the principal rea-sons for the advance today was the receipt of a telegram from Albion, Michigan, canceling an or-der to sell wheat, and reported the growing wheat in that vicinity badly damaged. From Randolph county, Illinois, reports were received reporting wheat in fine condition. Early speculative offer-ings were quite large, but steadily absorbed by a prominent operator, who was credited as being a seller yesterday. Later it was found that there was but little wheat for sale which, together with bull news, started shorts to covering, the advance holding until the close. A large business was done in corn, the market being more active than for several days past. Transactions were largely in May, though July received considerable attention. The firmer tone was due largely to receipts not running up to calculations of many, the strength in wheat and to rumors of floods in the Ohio valley. The market opened at yesterday's closing, was firm, advanced in all 342/36, eased off a little, ruled strong, closing 142/36 better than yesterday.

Oats were active, strong and higher. May was the feature of trading, and prices advanced 3/201/c. On tue bulge offerings increased, and prices receded \(\frac{1}{2} \)c, but the market closed steady \(\frac{3}{6} \)c higher than yesterday.

Mess pork—Only a fair trade was reported, May attracting the most attention. Prices were advanced 21/2@5c on the whole range, and the appreciation was moderately well maintained. Lard - Rather more doing, chiefly for May.

Prices were more doing, chieny for May. Prices were more favorable to sellers.

Short rib sides—Not quite so much doing, but the market was stronger. Prices were advanced 2½45c, especially on defagred deliveries, and the improvement was fairly well supported.
